21. After receiving the initial representations of Spain, the Secretary of State asked for further information from those representing Spain about the principles governing these matters in the Spanish system of criminal justice. This information has satisfied him that while the procedure differs in significant respects from that which would be followed in England, the underlying principle is substantially the same. The test of fitness to stand trial in Spain depends mainly on whether the accused is capable of understanding and following the charges against him, answering questions put to him, understanding the oral and documentary evidence for the defence and the prosecution, defending himself and instructing his lawyers. This is consistent with the representations as to Spanish law made on behalf of Senator Pinochet and on behalf of human rights organisations represented by Bindman & Partners. If Senator Pinochet were to be extradited to Spain, his fitness for trial would be assessed there by an objective process of clinical examination and testing. There is no reason to believe that that process would lead to conclusions any different in substance from those of the medical report commissioned by the Secretary of State in England. The Secretary of State is conscious that in Spain as in England, a "trial" may include the process of assessing the Defendant's fitness for trial. However, on the material before him, it is reasonable to assume that if Senator Pinochet were to be extradited to Spain, a trial there on the merits of the charges against him would be found impossible.

22. In considering whether to decide against extradition on account of Senator Pinochet's unfitness to stand trial, the Secretary of State has given careful thought to the alternative possibility of leaving that question to be determined in accordance with Spanish judicial procedures in Spain, in the event that there was no other objection to extraditing him there. He has been advised and has concluded that on the basis of English law he is bound to form a view of his own on Senator Pinochet's fitness to stand trial, and that he cannot refrain from reaching a concluded view on this point on the basis that the question can be determined in Spain. In the light of his conclusion that no improvement in Senator Pinochet's condition can be expected, he considers that no purpose would be served by the continuance of the current extradition proceedings in England. These would involve the continued detention of Senator Pinochet here for a period which, allowing for the habeas corpus proceedings and any appeal arising out of them, might be substantial. Any order for the extradition of Senator Pinochet which might then be made would involve the compulsory removal to another country of a man of 84 years of age who must at this stage be presumed innocent, for the purpose of a trial which could not result in any verdict on the charges against him, for reasons that are already apparent to the Secretary of State as the extradition authority in the United Kingdom. The Secretary of State considers that that course would serve no purpose of any substantial value to the interests of justice and that it would be oppressive to Senator Pinochet.

23. The Secretary of State would not necessarily have taken the same view if there had been any realistic prospect that Senator Pinochet's condition would improve, either spontaneously or as a result of treatment. He is aware that in Spanish law the effect of a finding that an accused is unfit to stand trial is to suspend a prosecution for as long as that state of affairs subsists, but it is not tantamount to an acquittal.

Section 12 of the Extradition Act 1989

24. Section 12(2)(a) of the Act provides that the Secretary of State may not order the extradition of the accused in relation to any alleged offence if it appears to him that: (i) by reason of its trivial nature; or (ii) by reason of the passage of time since he is alleged to have committed it . . . ; or (iii) because the accusation against him is not made in good faith in the interests of justice, it would, having regard to all the circumstances, be unjust or oppressive to return him.

25. The Secretary of State considers that this provision has no application to the present question. Although it would in his view be oppressive to order Senator Pinochet's extradition given his unfitness to stand trial, this state of affairs has not arisen by reason of the passage of time since he is alleged to have committed the offences. But for the lapse of time since the alleged offence, a decision under section 12 might possibly have fallen to be made before Senator Pinochet became unfit, but the cause of his unfitness is the supervening brain damage which appears to have occurred in September and October 1999. That damage was not itself either caused or aggravated by the lapse of time since the alleged offences. Neither of the other two factors identified in the sub-section is relevant.

26. It follows that Senator Pinochet's unfitness for trial is not an absolute bar to his extradition. It is a matter to be addressed as part of the general discretion of the Secretary of State under section 12(1).

The European Convention on Extradition

27. The United Kingdom and Spain are parties to the Convention.

28. The Convention requires extradition in all cases to which it applies, subject only to specific and limited exceptions, and to any reservations made by particular contracting states on their accession. In cases falling outside these exceptions and reservations, there is no general discretion. There is no express exception applicable to this case, nor is there any relevant reservation of the United Kingdom or Spain. The Secretary of State is advised that it is open to argument whether the Convention is subject to an implicit exception for cases where the primary purpose of any extradition, namely the trial of the charges alleged against the accused, could not be served. In the circumstances of this case, the Secretary of State considers it unnecessary to form a concluded view about that. He has assumed, in reaching his decision, that the Convention does not allow for the refusal of extradition on the ground that the accused is and will remain unfit to stand trial in the requesting state.

29. The Convention is not incorporated into English domestic law save to the limited extent provided for by the European Convention on Extradition Order 1990, SI 1990/1507. This provides simply for the Extradition Act 1989 to apply as between the United Kingdom and other parties to the Convention, and for it to do so on the basis contemplated in section 9(8)(a) of the Act that a prima facie case need not be shown on the committal hearing. Section 12 of the Act therefore applies, as a matter of English law, to extradition proceedings arising out of requests from states party to the Convention. The discretion conferred by it on the Secretary of State must be exercised in such cases.

30. Although the Convention is not part of English domestic law, the Secretary of State attaches great importance to the international obligations of the United Kingdom, and in the exercise of his discretions under the Extradition Act he regards those obligations as both relevant and entitled to considerable weight. In most cases to which the Convention applies they will be decisive. However, the Secretary of State recognises that given the breadth of his discretion under section 12 of the Act there may be some occasions on which the requirements of the Convention are outweighed by other compelling considerations peculiar to particular cases. The Secretary of State considers that they are outweighed by such considerations in this case, having regard in particular to the nature of Senator Pinochet's condition in a man of his age, to its probable permanence, and to its impact on the possibility of a trial of the charges against him.

31. The experience of the Home Office has been that in practice parties to the Convention operate its provisions in a more flexible fashion than its absolute language suggests, and in accordance with basic principles of justice which are common to all of them. It is consistent with this approach that Belgium should have been recorded in the judgment of the High Court on their recent application for judicial review as having > clearly stated that they would support the Secretary of State's decision if only they could be satisfied that Senator Pinochet is indeed shown by the report to be permanently unfit to stand trial; and that Spain should have informed the Secretary of State that they will respect any decision made by the Secretary of State in the exercise of his discretionary powers. In making his decision, the Secretary of State has not attached weight to the matters summarised in this paragraph, but he considers it right that they should be recorded.

Other countervailing considerations

32. The main consideration which has been urged upon the Secretary of State in favour of allowing the current extradition proceedings to take their course is the importance of ensuring so far as possible that the allegations made against Senator Pinochet should be tried. The Secretary of State agrees that this is important. The scope of the charges against Senator Pinochet was substantially reduced as a result of the decision of the House of Lords in R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate ex p. Pinochet (No. 3) [1999] 2 WLR 827, but the remaining charges are extremely serious. The Secretary of State attaches great importance to the principle that universal jurisdiction against persons charged with international crimes should be made effective, and he is aware that the practical consequence of refusing to extradite Senator Pinochet to Spain on account of his unfitness to stand trial is that he will probably not be tried anywhere. The Secretary of State is also mindful of the sense of injury which will be felt by those who suffered from breaches of human rights in Chile in the past, as well as their relatives. All of these are matters of legitimate concern, and he has had them very much in mind when considering the evidence about Senator Pinochet's state of health. They are among the reasons why he has required the evidence of Senator Pinochet's condition to satisfy a high standard of expertise, thoroughness, objectivity and cogency before he was prepared to act on it. Ultimately, however, the reservation "so far as possible" cannot be brushed aside. A trial of the charges against Senator Pinochet, however desirable, is no longer possible.

33. The Secretary of State has considered other factors, including a wide variety of matters raised in representations received at the Home Office. This letter has dealt in terms only with those matters which have had a significant bearing on the Secretary of State's decision. It is, however, right to mention the following further points:

(1) The Secretary of State understands that if Senator Pinochet were convicted in Spain of the offences charged against him, victims of those offences might be entitled to recover civil damages in proceedings ancillary to the criminal trial. The Secretary of State doubts whether this point could be relevant to a decision whether to extradite a person on a criminal charge, but he has reached no concluded view on its legal relevance, because he does not in any event feel able to attach significant weight to it. It is right to add that the point assumes the possibility of a verdict on the charges.

(2) The Secretary of State has not had regard to the possibility, if indeed it is a real one, that Senator Pinochet might be tried in Chile.

(3) The Secretary of State considers that in some circumstances it may be appropriate for him to have regard to political, economic or diplomatic interests of the United Kingdom in exercising his discretions under the Extradition Act. He has not had regard to such factors in making his present decision.

Referring the decision to the Court

34. The Secretary of State has been urged by a number of those who have made representations to him to leave to the Courts the question whether Senator Pinochet should be discharged on account of unfitness to stand trial. He has considered this possibility but does not propose to adopt it.

35. The High Court has power to discharge accused persons who are being unlawfully detained, and such further powers as are specifically conferred on it by the Extradition Act 1989. It has no inherent supervisory power over extradition. Under section 11(3) of the Act, the High Court on the hearing of a habeas corpus application has a duty similar to that of the Secretary of State under section 12(2)(a) to discharge an accused if by reason of the lapse of time since the offences are alleged to have been committed it would in all the circumstances be unjust or oppressive to order his extradition. If the Secretary of State had regarded these provisions as applicable he would have been bound to refuse to extradite Senator Pinochet. However, the facts making it oppressive to extradite Senator Pinochet do not arise from the lapse of time since the alleged offences. Therefore neither section 11(3) nor section 12(2)(a) applies. The Secretary of State is the only authority on whom a general discretion is conferred whether to order extradition. He has had regard in exercising it to the principle expressed by the courts on a number of occasions that the proper exercise of that discretion by the Secretary of State is the principal safeguard for the accused against oppression.

36. The Secretary of State would not, even if the Court had concurrent jurisdiction in the circumstances of this case, have thought it right to refrain from performing a duty or exercising a discretion conferred on him by statute, which he was in a position to exercise on material which he had commissioned for that purpose, simply because at some future stage another authority might take the decision instead.

Domestic prosecution

37. Article 7 of the Convention against Torture and other Cruel, Inhuman or Degrading Treatment or Punishment requires the Secretary of State, if he does not order the extradition of a person accused of torture, to submit the case to the United Kingdom prosecuting authorities for the purposes of a domestic prosecution. The Secretary of State has supplied papers in advance to the Solicitor General and the Director of Public Prosecutions for that purpose and has this morning referred the case to them under Article 7. Their functions in the matter are entirely independent of his.

Letters rogatory

38. The only additional matter is the application of Judge Garzon by letters rogatory of 15 January 2000 for Senator Pinochet to be required to appear in court to respond to a request for a statement. The Home Secretary has decided not to give effect to this request on the grounds that Senator Pinochet is not a compellable witness as a matter of English law.

Letter to the Belgian Ambassador:

39. The Secretary of State has today made a final decision not to issue an Authority to Proceed under section 7 of the Extradition Act 1989 in respect of the two requests of Belgium for Senator Pinochet's extradition, transmitted on 15 December 1998 and 11 November 1999. In making this decision, the Secretary of State has treated the "Elaborative Memorandum" transmitted on 3 February 2000 as supplementing those requests and has had regard to the full range of offences alleged against Senator Pinochet in all three documents.

40. Under 7(4) of the Extradition Act 1989, the Secretary of State is required to refuse an Authority to Proceed if an order for the extradition of Senator Pinochet could not lawfully be made or would not in fact be made in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Under those provisions, extradition is available only in respect of extradition crimes. The Secretary of State has directed himself on this point in accordance with the decision of the House of Lords in R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate ex p. Pinochet (No.3) [1999] 2 WLR 827. An offence committed outside the United Kingdom is not an extradition crime unless it was punishable in the United Kingdom at the date when it is alleged to have been committed. Torture outside the United Kingdom and conspiracy to torture outside the United Kingdom first became punishable in the United Kingdom on 29 September 1988 when section 134 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 came into force.

41. None of the matters set out in the two extradition requests of Belgium and the Elaborative Memorandum disclose offences of torture or conspiracy to torture committed after 29 September 1988. In the Elaborative Memorandum, attention is drawn to three cases in which persons disappeared in circumstances which have never been disclosed to their families. It is alleged that their disappearance constituted torture of themselves and their families, which in the absence of news of them continued, or must be treated as continuing, to the present day. It is an essential requirement of the offence of torture in English law that the accused should, by some act or omission, have intentionally inflicted severe physical or mental pain or suffering on another person or been party to the infliction of such pain or suffering. The Secretary of State does not regard the two extradition requests or the Elaborative Memorandum as alleging (i) any act or omission inflicting severe pain or suffering and occurring on or after 29 September 1988, or (ii) that any intention to inflict pain or suffering was continuing until 29 September 1988 or any later date, or (iii) an intention existing at any time to inflict pain or suffering on any one other than those who disappeared. Furthermore, the Secretary of State does not regard any such allegations as being implicit in the facts alleged.

42. There are no offences other than torture or conspiracy to torture disclosed in the two extradition requests or the Elaborative Memorandum which have at any time been punishable in the United Kingdom if committed outside the United Kingdom. The requirement that offences alleged in an extradition request should be punishable under the law of the requested state is of course reflected in the European Convention on Extradition.

43. If the Secretary State had regarded the two extradition requests and the Elaborative Memorandum as disclosing extradition crimes, he would nevertheless have refused to issue an Authority to Proceed in this case because he is satisfied that Senator Pinochet is unfit to stand trial and that there is no likelihood of significant improvement. He has today decided on that ground that he will not order the extradition of Senator Pinochet to Spain. It appears to him that even had the Belgian extradition requests and the Elaborative Memorandum disclosed extradition crimes Senator Pinochet's unfitness to stand trial would have precluded his extradition to Belgium for the same reasons as it precluded his extradition to Spain. The enclosed copy of my letter this morning to the Spanish Ambassador sets those reasons out.

44. In these circumstances, the question whether Senator Pinochet could claim state immunity in respect of the offences alleged against him does not arise.

45. I refer to the three letters of request issued by the examining magistrate Mr. Vandermeersch and transmitted on 19 and 24 January and 22 February 2000. The first of these seeks a further medical examination of Senator Pinochet. It has been executed in accordance with English law by inviting Senator Pinochet to submit voluntarily to the examination sought. He has declined to comply. In the light of the judgment of the High Court on 15 February 2000, the second letter of request has been executed so far as it seeks disclosure of the medical report. The Secretary of State does not propose to give effect to the second letter of request to any greater extent, having regard to the terms of that judgment and to his decision to refuse an Authority to Proceed in respect of Belgium's extradition requests. If Senator Pinochet were at some future stage to enter Belgium or to be extradited there from a third country, the Secretary of State will consider what further assistance might be appropriate. The third letter of request invites the Secretary of State or other competent authority to carry out an assessment of the frontal functions and of the autobiographical recall capacities of Senator Pinochet with the latter's consent. This letter has been executed so far as it can be by inviting Senator Pinochet's consent. He has declined. There is accordingly nothing more by way of execution to be done.

46. As indicated, I am enclosing a copy of the letter which I have sent this morning to the Spanish Ambassador.

Letter to Swiss Ambassador:

47. The Secretary of State has today made a final decision not to issue an Authority to Proceed under section 7 of the Extradition Act 1989 in respect of the request of Switzerland for Senator Pinochet's extradition, received on 11 November 1998 and renewed on 7 October 1999.

48. Under section 7(4) of the Extradition Act 1989, the Secretary of State is required to refuse an Authority to Proceed if an order for the extradition of Senator Pinochet could not lawfully be made or would not in fact be made in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Under those provisions, extradition is available only in respect of extradition crimes. The Secretary of State has directed himself on this point in accordance with the decision of the House of Lords in R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate ex p. Pinochet (No.3) [1999] 2 WLR 827. Torture outside the United Kingdom and conspiracy to torture outside the United Kingdom first became punishable in the United Kingdom on 29 September 1988 when section 134 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 came into force.

49. The requirement that offences alleged in an extradition request should be punishable under the law of the requested state is of course reflected in the European Convention on Extradition. None of the offences alleged in the extradition requests of Switzerland are alleged to have been committed after that date.

50. If the Secretary of State had regarded the extradition request of Switzerland as disclosing extradition crimes, he would nevertheless have refused to issue an Authority to Proceed in this case because he is satisfied that Senator Pinochet is unfit to stand trial and that there is no likelihood of significant improvement. He has today decided on that ground that he will not order the extradition of Senator Pinochet to Spain. It appears to him that even had the request of Switzerland disclosed extradition crimes Senator Pinochet's unfitness to stand trial would have precluded his extradition to Switzerland for the same reasons as it precluded his extradition to Spain. The enclosed copy of my letter this morning to the Spanish Ambassador sets those reasons out.

51. In these circumstances, the question whether Senator Pinochet could claim state immunity in respect of the offences alleged against him does not arise.

52. As indicated, I am enclosing a copy of the letter which I have sent this morning to the Spanish Ambassador.

Letter to French Ambassador:

53. The Secretary of State has today made a final decision not to issue an Authority to Proceed under section 7 of the Extradition Act 1989 in respect of the requests of France for Senator Pinochet's extradition, transmitted on 13 November 1998 and 4 February 1999.

54. Under section 7(4) of the Extradition Act 1989, the Secretary of State is required to refuse an Authority to Proceed if an order for the extradition of Senator Pinochet could not lawfully be made or would not in fact be made in accordance with the provisions of the Act. Under those provisions, extradition is available only in respect of extradition crimes. The Secretary of State has directed himself on this point in accordance with the decision of the House of Lords in R v. Bow Street Metropolitan Stipendiary Magistrate ex p. 55. The requirement that offences alleged in an extradition request should be punishable under the law of the requested state is of course reflected in the European Convention on Extradition. None of the offences alleged in the extradition requests of France are alleged to have been committed after that date.

56. If the Secretary of State had regarded the extradition requests of France as disclosing extradition crimes, he would nevertheless have refused to issue an Authority to Proceed in this case because he is satisfied that Senator Pinochet is unfit to stand trial and that there is no likelihood of significant improvement. He has today decided on that ground that he will not order the extradition of Senator Pinochet to Spain. It appears to him that, even had the requests of France disclosed extradition crimes, Senator Pinochet's unfitness to stand trial would have precluded his extradition to France for the same reasons as it precluded his extradition to Spain. The enclosed copy of my letter this morning to the Spanish Ambassador sets those reasons out.

57. In these circumstances, the question whether Senator Pinochet could claim state immunity in respect of the offences alleged against him does not arise.

58. A letter of request of 22 February from Judge Le Loire sought a further medical examination of Senator Pinochet. That request was forwarded to Senator Pinochet's legal representatives on 29 February. They confirm that he does not propose to comply.

59. As indicated, I am enclosing a copy of the letter which I have sent this morning to the Spanish Ambassador.

Tote

Mr. Olner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the sale of the Tote and the future of the Levy Board. [111812]

Mr. Straw: The futures of the Horserace Totalisator Board (The Tote) and the Horserace Betting Levy Board have, for different reasons, been under review. I am now able to set out the Government's conclusions.

I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Leigh (Mr. Cunliffe), on 12 May 1999, Official Report, columns 159–160W, that the Government had decided to sell the Tote and that further work would be put in hand to determine the most appropriate method of sale. That work, which included the evaluation by independent financial advisers of a range of sale options, has now been completed. The options included flotation of the Tote on the stock market, its sale by open competitive auction and a sale to horseracing. Consideration of the best option was helped by the agreement of all relevant horseracing interests to support a single proposal to buy the Tote on behalf of racing, in order to maintain the position under which all the Tote's profits are used for the benefit of racing.

Following careful consideration of all the available sale options, I have concluded that a sale to racing represents the best match, in principle, with the Government's objectives for the sale as a whole, as set out in my May 1999 statement. While the price to be paid by racing for the Tote will need to be the subject of commercial negotiation, it will be important to ensure that it is a fair one which strikes the right balance between the respective legitimate interests in the Tote of both racing and the taxpayer.

Racing's proposal to Government aims to ensure that those who are responsible for managing and developing the Tote's business do so within a fully commercial operating environment. I believe that this represents the best options for the Tote and its staff, not forgetting, of course, all those who bet with it.

We therefore propose to bring forward legislation, at the appropriate time and when Parliamentary time allows, which would enable the sale to proceed on this basis. However, a final decision will need to take account of circumstances at the time, including the outcome of commercial negotiations and relevant legal considerations.

I have also today published the report of the quinquennial review of the Horserace Betting Levy Board; copies have been placed in the Library.

The Levy Board was set up in 1961 to collect a levy on horserace bets from bookmakers and to disburse it for the benefit of racing.

The Report concludes that the Levy Board is an efficient body which carries out its statutory functions well, but that most of those functions no longer need to be carried out in the public sector. In particular, the arrangements under which racing receives income from bookmaking should become a matter for settlement between the parties on a commercial basis.

The Report recommends that the Government, in co-operation with the Levy Board and the industries involved, should take forward detailed consideration of all of the associated issues including the Board's important role in the provision of integrity services and its regulatory functions.

The Government agree with these conclusions, and propose to bring forward, once again at the appropriate time and when Parliamentary time allows, legislative proposals for the abolition of the Levy Board. We shall now be discussing with the Board, the British Horseracing Board and other representatives of the racing and bookmaking industries, the steps needed to put alternative arrangements in place. As part of this process I shall be asking the British Horseracing Board, as racing's governing body, to prepare a realistic plan which shows how racing will be run as a national sport without a statutory levy.

I should make it clear that the decision to abolish the levy system is no reflection on the performance of either the Board or its staff. Both have made a significant contribution to the administration of racing over many years, which we gratefully acknowledge.

The sale of the Tote and the abolition of the levy system will together mark an important change in the relationship between the Government and horseracing. The Home Secretary is responsible for policy on the regulation of gambling, which requires consideration of its social impact and measures to ensure protection against crime and exploitation. For reasons of history, this responsibility has involved the Government in the administration and financing of British horseracing to an extent and in ways which are no longer needed.

My recent announcement that the Government are to establish an independent review of gambling offers racing, and others, an opportunity to put forward their ideas for the future control and regulation of betting on horseracing. Meanwhile, the sale of the Tote and the abolition of the Levy should enable racing to take more control of its own affairs and finances, as befits a mature sport. In preparing the legislation needed to give effect to these changes, the Government are committed to working closely with racing, bookmaking and other relevant interests to ensure that the results which are delivered match up to our aspirations. Horseracing is an important and successful national sport which gives employment and pleasure to many people. We want it to prosper.

Metropolitan Police (Private Medical Treatment)

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the Metropolitan Police Service report into the pilot project which involved the use of private medical facilities to treat Metropolitan police officers. [112751]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner tells me that the Metropolitan police are undertaking a "Spend-to-Save" pilot scheme for the early diagnosis of musculo-skeletal conditions that involves the use of private medical facilities. The scheme commenced in May 1999 and will run to the end of April 2000, after which a report will be published. I will arrange for a copy to be placed in the Library.

River Thames (Bodies Recovered)

Mr. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many bodies recovered from the Thames by the Metropolitan police in the last five years have been incapable of identification. [111987]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan police has informed me that between 1 January 1995 and 24 February 2000 his officers recovered 197 bodies from the River Thames. Of these, seven currently remain incapable of identification.

Gammahydroxybutyrate

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of

(1) the recent announcement by the President of the United States of America of the decision to place gammahydroxybutyrate in Schedule 1 of the Controlled Substance Act; and if he will make a statement; [111873]

(2) the impact of recent moves in the US to place gammahydroxybutyrate under the Controlled Substances Act; and if he will make a statement. [111722]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I am aware that in the United States of America the Controlled Substances Act has recently been amended to include gammahydroxybutyrate. This information will also be made available to the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs who are responsible for keeping drug misuse in the United Kingdom under review.

It is important to bear in mind that drug misuse patterns vary from country to country. Gammahydroxybutyrate misuse has given rise to concern in the United States of America for a number of years. Historically, it has been widely available there and could be purchased over the counter in health food stores until 1992.

Prison Budgets (London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the financial budget allocated to each London prison in each of the last five years. [111938]

Mr. Boateng: Budgets are adjusted periodically during the year. The final budgets for the years 1995–96 to 1998–99 and the latest budget for 1999–2000 are given in the table.

Civil Servants (Relocation)

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the Government make use of relocation companies when relocating civil servants. [112063]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office and its agencies use one relocation company, Hambro Countrywide Relocation, to assist members of staff who have been authorised to move home at public expense following a transfer within, or into, the Department.

Correspondence

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will reply to the letter from the right hon. Member for North-East Bedfordshire concerning the asylum application concerning Mr. Arif and Mrs. Susan Tuysuz originally lodged in 1994. [111717]

Mrs. Roche: I wrote to the right hon. Member on 28 February. I am sorry for the delay.

Police Recruitment

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Elmet of 9 February 2000, Official Report, column 172W, if he will publish a breakdown of the figure of 12,478 police recruits on a (a) force by force and (b) year by year basis. [111872]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Members for North-East Hertfordshire (Mr. Heald) and for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 21 February 2000, Official Report, column 828W.

Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) Bill

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy that magistrates should take into account possible loss of reputation in deciding whether to allow an election for jury trial under the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill. [112361]

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the impact on the confidence of (a) the general public and (b) members of the ethnic minorities in the criminal justice system of his proposals under the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill; and if he will make a statement. [112519]

Mr. Straw: The Bill is part of the Government's programme to modernise the criminal justice system, to make it more responsive to the needs of victims of crime and the public at large. It is designed to prevent defendants from manipulating the system by demanding Crown Court trial in trivial cases just to delay proceedings. It does not prevent cases from being tried by jury where Crown Court trial is appropriate, and there is no reason why there should be any diminution in public confidence. Rather, it is likely to enhance public confidence.

The Government have given careful consideration to the concerns that the changes could adversely affect minority ethnic defendants. They are satisfied that this is not the case. Home Office data published on 9 December 1999 show a higher conviction rate for white defendants (67 per cent) than for black defendants (57 per cent) in the magistrates courts. A similar pattern emerges from a separate study (to be published on 3 March), which shows that both in magistrates courts and in the Crown Court white defendants are more likely (by about six percentage points) to be convicted than black defendants.

Under the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill, magistrates courts would consider the circumstances of the offence but not the circumstances of the defendant. They would therefore be precluded from taking account of the effect of conviction on an accused's reputation (or livelihood), which under the original Mode of Trial Bill they would have been required to consider. The change was made in response to the widely-expressed concern that such considerations might discriminate in favour of certain categories of defendant and against others. The criteria in the new Bill will ensure that the courts make an objective decision on where a case should be tried.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to increase the number of (a) lay magistrates, (b) stipendiary magistrates, (c) recorders and assistant recorders and (d) circuit judges if the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill is enacted. [112518]

Mr. Straw: My right hon. Friend the Lord Chancellor has no plans to increase the number of lay magistrates, stipendiary magistrates, recorders and assistant recorders and circuit judges as a consequence of enacting the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the average (a) cost of, (b) length of and (c) waiting time for (1) a trial in the magistrates court following the dismissal of an appeal to the Crown Court from the decision of magistrates on mode of trial, under the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill; [112539]

(2) a hearing of (i) an oral and (ii) a written appeal to the Crown Court from the decision of magistrates on mode of trial, under the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill. [112537]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply given on 27 January 2000, Official Report, column 250W. There will be no change under the Number 2 Bill.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the (a) number and (b) cost of additional appeals to the Crown Court against the (i) verdicts and (ii) sentences of magistrates, if the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill is enacted. [112531]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to my reply given on 16 February 2000, Official Report, column 544W. There would be no significant change under the (No. 2) Bill.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to issue national guidelines to magistrates in England and Wales on the nature of the circumstances for each type of either-way offence which would normally lead to that offence being tried (a) summarily and (b) on indictment if the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill is enacted. [112534]

Mr. Straw: National Mode of Trial Guidelines were issued in 1995 by the then Lord Chief Justice, setting out the circumstances in which magistrates should consider committing an either-way offence for trial in the Crown Court. Although the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill is not intended significantly to change the basis on which magistrates make their decisions on mode of trial, some amendments to the guidelines would be necessary to bring them into line with the Bill.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the effect of the requirement in (a) the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) Bill and (b) the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill for magistrates courts to state the reasons for their decision as to mode of trial on the percentage of appeals to the Crown Court against the magistrates' decision. [112530]

Mr. Straw: The requirement (which is in the (No. 2) Bill only) for magistrates to give reasons is not expected to affect the number of defendants exercising the right of appeal to the Crown Court on mode of trial.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the number of defendants who will exercise the right of appeal to the Crown Court on mode of trial, under the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill; and what estimate he has made of the percentage of appeals that will be successful. [112538]

Mr. Straw: It is assumed that 3,500 defendants (25 per cent. of those who would have elected and whom the magistrates have decided to try) will appeal; that 17.5 per cent. of these cases will proceed to an oral hearing; and that 12.5 per cent. of appeals considered on the papers, and 27.5 per cent. of oral appeals, will be successful.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the increase in the number of cases in (a) the Divisional Courts (b) the Court of Appeal and (c) the House of Lords as a result of the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill being enacted; what will be the additional costs to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [112535]

Mr. Straw: Our estimate is that any change in the number of cases going to these courts will be de minimis.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what factors underlay his estimate of (a) the cost savings that would be made and (b) the number of defendants who would be tried in the magistrates' courts rather than the Crown court under (i) the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill and (ii) the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) Bill; [112528]

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of the estimated savings to the criminal justice system from the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill by each principal category of expenditure; and if he will make a statement. [112533]

Mr. Straw: For the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) Bill it was assumed that 12,000 fewer defendants would be tried in the Crown Court annually, resulting in resource savings to the criminal justice system of £105 million a year. For the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill it is assumed that 14,000 fewer defendants would be tried in the Crown Court annually, resulting in resource savings to the criminal justice system of £128 million a year.

The £128 million estimated annual resource savings are made up as follows:

for the courts—£12.5 million on committals and £41.5 million on Crown Court trials which would no longer take place. This would be offset by the cost of magistrates courts trials (£8.5 million, including the cost of any subsequent committals for sentence), and the cost (estimated at £0.5 million) of interlocutory appeals to the Crown Court.

for the Prison Service—savings of £83.5 million annually would result from a reduction in remand times and the shorter sentences imposed by magistrates courts.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy that appeals to the Crown Court against magistrates' decisions as to mode of trial under the provisions of the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill should be heard (1) by circuit judges only; and if he will make a statement; [112536]

(2) in open court; and if he will make a statement. [112529]

Mr. Straw: The intention is that the appeal should be heard by the Resident Judge or by a deputy nominated by the senior presiding Judge. The Government believe that most appeals will be determined on the basis of the papers. It would however be open to the parties to seek to make oral representations, which the judge could agree to hear if he considered it necessary in the interests of justice; the arrangements for such an oral hearing would be a matter for the judge's discretion.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the length of the average waiting time for a trial in a magistrates court if the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill is enacted. [112517]

Mr. Straw: The magistrates courts deal with over 400,000 either-way cases annually and will have no difficulty in absorbing the additional cases which it is expected that they will retain as a result of the Bill.

Asylum Seekers (Chelmsford)

Mr. Burns: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers the Chelmsford Borough Council area will be expected to house from April; and if he will make a statement. [112493]

Mrs. Roche: The number and location of asylum seekers accommodated under the national asylum support scheme throughout the country will depend on where accommodation, whether in the private or public sector, is made available to the Home Office for that purpose, on where there are existing ethnic minority communities and on where there is the potential for support services to be developed.

The Home Office intends to secure accommodation from local authorities through Regional Consortia. Chelmsford is in the Eastern Region Consortium.

Freedom of Information

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will include in the code of practice on freedom of information a provision that, where a request is made for information about a third party, the holder of the information should consult the third party before deciding what information is to be released and in what form. [112676]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I can confirm that this will be covered by the code of practice, a working draft of which my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I hope to place in the Parliamentary Libraries shortly.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I approved, in September 1999, Home Office funding of £10,000 for a "think-tank" and up to £40,000 for a research report on the costs of racial discrimination to be used at the Congress. The other matters will be addressed in the review which my right hon. Friend has asked Gurbux Singh to conduct.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if at meetings of the Commission for Racial Equality, Commissioners who were at the same time directors of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. voted on business related to Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. [112714]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The decision-making process will be examined by Gurbux Singh in the review he is to undertake.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when members of the International Strategic Steering Committee of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress were informed that the Congress had been cancelled, and by whom; and if he will make a statement. [112679]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The decision to cancel the Congress and to notify interested parties was primarily a matter for Global Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what disciplinary action he plans to take against officials of (a) his Department and (b) the Commission for Racial Equality in respect of the cancellation of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress and the collapse of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd; and if he will make a statement. [112721]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: This must await the outcome of the review.

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No. Organisational issues relating to the event and its cancellation were the responsibility of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. We are unaware of all of those who were expected to take part in this way at the moment.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if (a) he (b) Ministers in his Department or (c) officials in his Department authorised the donation of money from his Department to fund the Global Cultural Diversity Congress; and if he will make a statement. [112742]

The results of this report are valid in any event and will be publicised.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the involvement of the hon. Member for Warwickshire North, with the Global Cultural Diversity Congress and Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. [112741]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary and I met representatives of the Commission for Racial Equality to discuss the Congress and the company on 21 and 22 February. Commission for Racial Equality

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the Government's policy is on directors of a company in liquidation holding office on the Commission for Racial Equality. [112710]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Government policy on public appointments is set out under Nolan guidelines by the Office of the Commissioner for Public Appointments. There is no specific reference to directors of a company in liquidation.

Matters relating to the appointment of Commissioners are considered on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when Mr. Hugh Harris was appointed Acting Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality, and by whom. [112713]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary appointed Hugh Harris to take on the role of Acting Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality on Monday 7 February, following Sir Herman Ouseley's retirement.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many limited companies currently trading have been set up by (a) the Commission for Racial Equality and (b) other non-departmental public bodies; and if he will make a statement. [112727]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: One. Five other Home Office Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies have limited companies currently trading.

Strip-search Procedures

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what date a review of strip search procedures was undertaken; if the report was completed; when he will publish and respond to its recommendations; if he will make a statement concerning the management of this review indicating how many staff were allocated to its completion and at what level supervision was undertaken; what consultation took place with non-Governmental organisations; and how many communications he has received on the issue. [111948]

Mr. Boateng: I am pleased to announce that I received the Prison Service's report on searches of the person last week. Copies have been placed in the Library and are available on the Prison Service website at www.hmprisonservice.gov.uk.

The report makes 16 recommendations, all of which have been accepted by the Prison Service.

The review was co-ordinated by one senior executive officer in the Prison Service's security group who consulted and involved many staff of a variety of grades both in the Prison Service headquarters and in prison establishments. As this was an internal review, non-governmental organisations were not consulted, but publications on the subject by several such organisations were taken into account.

Five Parliamentary Questions have been received from my hon. Friend, and one from hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones). In addition, a letter was received from my hon. Friend the Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak.

The emerging findings were then subjected to rigorous competitive analysis by other staff across the Service, including senior managers. This process has taken a long time, and other priority tasks prevented the earlier completion of the report. But I am satisfied that the Prison Service took the completion of this report very seriously.

Departmental Press Office

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost to public funds of his plans to expand his Department's Press Office; and if he will make a statement. [112527]

Mr. Straw: Individual salaries differ but our estimate is that the cost of extra staff for the Home Office Press Office will be up to £400,000 in a full year.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what the cost is to public funds of the relocation of his Department's Press Office to Queen Anne's Gate; and if he will make a statement. [112523]

Mr. Straw: An independent consultant's report, produced by Clear Communications Ltd. in 1999, recommended a major restructuring of the Home Office Press Office. The Home Office Press Office is now being restructured and a number of additional posts have been created. It is not possible to fit it into its existing accommodation in Queen Anne's Gate, which in any case is considerably substandard. It is therefore proposed to move it and some other parts of Communication Directorate to another floor in the same building some time in May. Detailed costings are dependent on a number of factors and are not yet available.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to modernise his Department's Press Office IT system; what is the cost to public funds; and if he will make a statement. [112525]

Mr. Straw: In the short term, the Home Office Press Office is taking part in the pilot running of a Briefing and Reference Database (BARD). This combines published information such as news releases, speeches, Parliamentary business and basic facts and figures about Home Office business so that press officers can answer quickly and accurately media inquiries. In the long term the Communication Directorate, along with the rest of the Home Office, will benefit from new working practices and Information Technology (IT) systems under a proposed Private Finance Initiative project called IT 2000. No detailed costs are available.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press officers are employed by his Department's Press Office; how many are to be recruited to the news team as part of the current restructuring process; and if he will make a statement. [112544]

Mr. Straw: At present there are 14 press officers (including three trainees and one Chief Immigration Officer on secondment) employed in the main Home Office Press Office, with three unfilled vacancies. The restructuring of the Press Office could involve the appointment of up to 10 further press officers.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the (a) minimum and (b) maximum starting salary for recruits to his Department's new Press Office news team; and if he will make a statement. [112524]

Mr. Straw: The new Press Office news team will largely be recruited at Information Officer grade, for which the pay band is £15,902 to £27,709 p.a.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the functions of his Department's new Press Office news team. [112522]

Mr. Straw: The planned restructuring of the Home Office Press Office will enable it to separate the functions of dealing with breaking news from those of more medium to long-term communications planning. The plan involves the setting up of a team of press officers who would operate from roughly 6 am to about 10 pm on weekdays in order to deal with the growing 24-hour demands of the media. This team would deal with today's stories in the media, handle media bids for interviews with Ministers and urgent media statements when these are needed.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press officers are to be recruited to his Department's new Press Office news team; and if he will make a statement. [112526]

Mr. Straw: An independent consultant's report, produced by Clear Communications Ltd. in 1999, recommended a major restructuring of the Home Office Press Office and an increase in staff resources of up to 10 press officers. This restructuring will enable the unit to deal better with the growing number of media calls it is receiving and be reactive and proactive to the growing number of continuous 24-hour news operations. An advertisement recently appeared in the trade press and the plan is to recruit up to 10 additional staff.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many press officers were employed in his Department on (a) 1 May 1997, (b) 1 January 1998, (c) 1 January 1999 and (d) 1 January 2000; at what grades they were employed; and what was the cost to public funds of their employment. [112397]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 1 March 2000]: Records of staff numbers are of necessity a snapshot of a particular month and do not take into account staff arrivals and departures which are happening constantly. The press office has for instance seen a turnover of staff of nearly 200 per cent. since January 1997.

The relevant staff numbers and staff costs (which include Superannuation and National Insurance) are:

May 1997—total of 15 Press Officers at approximate cost of £370,000. The grades were: three Senior Information Officers, ten Information Officers, two part-time, one Assistant Information Officer and a Higher Executive Officer on secondment;

January 1998—total of 14 Press Officers at approximate cost of £330,000. The grades were: three Senior Information Officers and 11 Information Officers, two part-time;

January 1999—a total of 14 Press Officers at approximate cost of £330,000. The grades were: two Senior Information Officers, eight Information Officers, two part time, three Assistant Information Officers and a Higher Executive Officer on secondment; and January 2000—a total of 13 Press Officers at approximate cost of £345,000. The grades were: three Senior Information Officers, six Information Officers, three Assistant Information Officers and a Higher Executive Officer.

In addition, at various times throughout this period Chief Immigration Officers were on six-month attachment to the press office. It should also be noted that the grades referred to are substantive grades and that at various times press officers may have been on temporary promotion to a higher grade.

Internal Communications Advisers

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many internal communications advisers are to be recruited by his Department; what is their (a) minimum and (b) maximum starting salary; and if he will make a statement. [112520]

Mr. Straw: Ten Internal Communication Advisers are to be recruited by the Home Office.

They will be Grade 7 appointments with a minimum starting salary of £29,777 and a maximum starting salary of £46,112.

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the functions of his Department's Internal Communications Advisers. [112521]

Mr. Straw: The functions of the Internal Communication Advisers are to:

(i) support the modernisation programme and business change within individual Directorates and Agencies in the Home Office;

(ii) tailor the Home Office internal communication strategy for a specified Directorate or Agency incorporating best industry practice;

(iii) support the implementation of the Home Office Internal Communication strategy, working as part of a team of Internal Communication Advisers within the Home Office;

(iv) develop the key communication skills of senior managers and managers within Home Office Directorates and Agencies, making full use of in-house and external agency expertise;

(v) ensure local communication activities are co-ordinated with other communication activities across the whole Home Office by working via the Head of Internal Communication; and

(vi) develop and manage mechanisms to gather feedback, such as surveys and focus groups.

General Pinochet

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on the medical condition of General Pinochet since 16 February; and if he will place copies of them in the Library. [112695]

Mr. Straw: I have received various representations which I intend to place in the Library when I have secured the agreement of the requesting states which have provided them.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Departmental Staff

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of his Department's staff were (a) registered disabled, (b) women, (c) from ethnic minorities and (d) from (i) independent, (ii) grammar and (iii) other schools in (1) 1970, (2) 1979, (3) 1989 and (4) 1999. [106762]

Mr. Wills: Details of the percentage of the Department's staff who were registered disabled, women and from ethnic minorities in 1999 are given below and comprise staff in DfEE Head Office sites, the Employment Service and DfEE staff working in the Government Office network. The figures for permanent and temporary (casual) staff are shown separately.

Permanent staff

There were a total of 36,934 permanent staff employed in DfEE at 1 April 1999 of whom:

1,933 had declared a disability, which is equal to 5.4 per cent. of the total number

27,296 were women, which is equal to 73.9 per cent. of the total number

2,317 were known to be from an ethnic minority background, which is equal to 6.3 per cent. of the total number.

Temporary (casual) staff

There were a total of 3,539 temporary (casual) staff employed in DfEE at 1 April 1999 of whom:

52 had declared a disability, which is equal to 1.5 per cent. of the total number

2,279 were women, which is equal to 64 per cent of the total number

102 were known to be from an ethnic minority background, which is equal to 2.9 per cent. of the total number.

The provisions in the Disability Discrimination Act, 1995, replace the former quota scheme, the designated employment scheme and the requirement to register as a disabled person. Instead, individuals may now voluntarily declare a disability under the definitions contained in the Act; this is the basis for the information given.

DfEE (in line with the Commission for Racial Equality guidelines) asks staff to voluntarily declare their ethnicity in order to monitor progress against its Equal Opportunities Action Plan. The figures reflect the position for those who have provided this information. We are unable to supply details of the percentage of the Department's staff who were registered disabled, women and from ethnic minorities in 1970, 1979 or 1989, nor statistical information on the type of school attended by staff. This is for the following two reasons:

The Department for Education and Employment (DfEE) came into existence in 1995, following Machinery of Government changes. The records retained for predecessor departments are limited and incomplete and are insufficient to provide the information requested for the three years in question. Neither does DfEE (nor did its predecessor departments) hold information centrally on the type of secondary school attended by its staff. Individual records hold the name, but not the classification, of the school.

Caroline Flint: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment in each of the last five years, what proportion of women employees in (i) his Department and (ii) executive agencies under the control of his Department (a) returned to work after childbirth, (b) returned to work after childbirth before the end of maternity leave, indicating the (1) time-range and (2) mean time, (c) returned to work after childbirth on reduced working hours, indicating the average hours worked and (d) returned to work after childbirth full-time and subsequently reduced their hours. [108967]

Mr. Wills: We are unable to answer all elements of the question because the information needed could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, details of the proportion of women employees in DfEE (which includes DfEE staff in Government Offices) and ES, who returned to work after childbirth in each of the last five years (part (a) of the question), is shown in the following table. The figures for 1995 include, from January to July, women in the former Department for Education and Employment Department Group who transferred to DfEE following Machinery of Government change in July 1995.

The figures are expressed as a percentage of the total number who completed maternity leave in each of the years shown.

1996	1,641	98.1
1997	1,338	99.3
1999	970	99.8

New Deal

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how much has been spent to date on the New Deal for the long-term unemployed aged 18 to 24 years. [107437]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 28 January 2000]: Since its start in 1998, to the end of December 1999, £550.8 million has been spent on the New Deal for young people. Expenditure on the New Deal is planned over the lifetime of this Parliament; any unspent resource in one year is therefore available in future years. Independent research published last year indicates that the impact on the economy of the New Deal for young people is likely to be of a sufficient scale to largely offset the cost of the programme.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment the Government have made of the level of retention in employment of those on the New Deal employment option; and if he will make a statement. [109282]

Ms Jowell: Of the 24,670 young people who joined the employer option before October 1999, 80 per cent. remained on the option for at least 13 weeks.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the impact of each New Deal scheme on unemployment in Cumbria. [109286]

Ms Jowell: In the period ending December 1999, 2,245 young people in Cumbria had found employment through the New Deal for Young People. Over the last two years, the numbers of 18 to 24-year-olds unemployed for six months or more has fallen by 74 per cent.

Similarly, in the period ending December 1999, 506 people in Cumbria had found employment through the New Deal for long term unemployed adults aged 25 or over. In the period July 1998 to December 1999, the numbers of adults aged 25 or over unemployed for at least two years fell by 41 per cent.

These results demonstrate the positive impact the New Deal has on long term unemployed people of all ages.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what estimate the Government have made of the cost to businesses of participating in the New Deal in (a) the UK as a whole and (b) Cumbria. [109285]

Ms Jowell: There is a comprehensive programme of evaluation of New Deal underway, which includes qualitative and quantitative research with employers at a national level. A report on the survey is due to be published around the end of July 2000.

Leeds LEA

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) infant children in classes of 31 or more, (b) after school clubs, (c) summer literacy schools, (d) summer numeracy schools, (e) school projects benefiting from New Deal for Schools capital funding and (f) qualified teaching assistants there were in the area of Leeds Local Education Authority for the years 1996–97 to 1999–2000. Class Sizes (Somerset)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is his estimate of the number of pupils in Somerset in classes with over 30 pupils in (a) 1996–97, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000, broken down by (i) Key Stage 1, (ii) Key Stage 2, (iii) Key Stage 3 and (iv) Key Stage 4; and if he will make a statement. [110763]

Ms Estelle Morris: The available information is shown in the tables.

The January class size count for the academic year 1999–2000 is currently being undertaken and provisional national estimates are expected to be published in April.

Peat Compost

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what steps he is taking to phase out the use of peat compost in gardens (a) owned and (b) tended by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [110726]

Mr. Wills: My Department's policy is based around the Model Improvement Programme for Greening Operations which DETR published in 1998, and includes a commitment to substitute the use of all slow renewables such as peat with organic wastes such as coir, manure, leaf mould and bark chippings. The Department's procurement policy reflects this commitment.

Recycling

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of documentation used by his Department is (a) made from recycled paper and (b) collected for recycling. [111597]

Mr. Wills: Information is not collected centrally in the form requested. My Department's contracted stationery suppliers offer recycled paper. Individual Divisions within the Department make decisions on the purchase of paper under the Departmental wide contract based on value for money, quality and fitness for purpose. My Department's HQ sites have paper recycling schemes in place.

Asset Sales

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 25W, on asset sales, if he will list the individual land and buildings sold by the Employment Service and the value realised from the sale of each item. [111267]

Ms Jowell: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated February 2000:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question pursuant to his Answer of 24 January, Official Report, column 25W, on asset sales about the individual land and buildings sold by the Employment Service and the value realised from the sale of each item. This is something that falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

In answer to your question, I have listed below the details you have requested.

Land and building	Sale proceeds
West London Area Training Centre (Chiswick)	450,111
Elephant and Castle Jobcentre	3,250,643
Crosby Jobcentre	170,000

Total	4,007,727

[1] This building was sold late in 1999, but was not included in the reply to Parliamentary Question No. 104497 as the details had not been confirmed at the time

I hope this is helpful.

Carlisle Jobcentre

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to relocate the jobcentre in Carlisle; and if he will make a statement. [111419]

Ms Jowell: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Leigh Lewis to Mr. Eric Martlew, dated February 2000:

As the Employment Service is an Executive Agency, the Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question concerning plans to relocate Carlisle Jobcentre. This falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Agency.

Our Jobcentre in Carlisle is currently located at Edenbridge House, Lowther Street, Carlisle in premises leased from the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food. The current lease is due to expire on 31 March 2001 and we understand that the Ministry of Agriculture would like to be able to utilise the space currently occupied by the Jobcentre.

Accordingly, we are currently looking at possible alternative premises. In doing so we will, of course, aim to find a location which offers at least the same standards of accommodation for both our customers and staff as we have currently.

I hope this is helpful.

New Deal (Young People)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer of 15 February 2000, Official Report, column 470W, on the New Deal, if he will list the number of young people on each of the New Deal options in Shrewsbury and Atcham broken down into (a) employment, (b) full-time education/training, (c) voluntary sector and (d) environment task force; and if he will make a statement. [111063]

Ms Jowell: The numbers of young people on each of the New Deal Options in Shrewsbury and Atcham at the end of December were as follows:

	Number
Employment Option	4
FTET	17
ETF	12
VS	12

I expect many of these to join the 155 young people who have already found work as a result of New Deal in Shrewsbury and Atcham.

New Deal (JSA)

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will review the requirement under the New Deal programme whereby a JSA claimant who stops claiming JSA to work on a temporary contract with a employer has, on completing the contract to wait a further six months before becoming eligible for training. [112089]

Ms Jowell: There is no case for a review. Anyone who has been in employment for several months or more immediately prior to making a claim for Jobseeker's Allowance (JSA) has an excellent chance of finding a job quickly and will be helped to do so by the Employment Service.

The New Deal for Young People is designed to help those who are at risk of long-term unemployment. It is essential that we target resources effectively. New Deal advisers have discretion to allow early access to the programme for young people claiming JSA who are likely to find it particularly difficult to find work.

Equal Pay Act 1970

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he intends to amend section 2(5) of the Equal Pay Act 1970 to entitle an employee in Scotland to arrears of remuneration or damages for breach of the principle of equal pay for a period of six years. [111929]

Ms Jowell: We are considering the implications of recent case law for the provisions in the Equal Pay Act on entitlement to arrears of pay for employees across the UK. I will make a further statement in due course.

Education Maintenance Allowance

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many awards have been made of the education maintenance allowance in the 15 pilot areas in England so far; and what is the cost of these awards (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of the budgeted amount. [111714]

Mr. Wicks: The information requested is shown in the table (figures refer to the period up to and including 18 February):

	Current EMA recipients	Total cost to date (£)
Bolton	1,130	420,760
Cornwall	2,770	1,442,447
Doncaster	1,241	634,959
Gateshead	953	502,261
Greenwich	205	108,178
Lambeth	179	89,350
Leeds	962	508,108
Lewisham	175	70,591
Middlesbrough	913	443,841
Nottingham	1,184	821,835
Oldham	1,205	641,975
Southampton	804	358,836
Southwark	108	37,175
Stoke	1,179	656,569
Walsall	1,114	594,851
Total	14,122	7,331,736

There is no set budget as the scheme is demand led. Some EMA applications remain uncleared where further information is required from applicants.

We are encouraged by anecdotal information which suggests that EMAs are having a positive impact already. A number of institutions have reported improved attendance and a stronger work ethic among EMA recipients. EMAs have the potential to make a real difference to the life chances of young people and we are pleased that the pilot areas have made an encouraging start and continue to consolidate the progress already made.

University Fees and Grants

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the proposed annual university (a) fees and (b) repayable grants for tuition at universities in each part of the United Kingdom for students who are (i) UK citizens, (ii) other EU citizens, (iii) Commonwealth citizens, (iv) Irish and (v) other, (A) educated and (B) resident in the previous four years in (1) England, (2) Scotland, (3) Ireland, (4) other European Countries, (5) Commonwealth countries and (6) other places. [111996]

Mr. Wicks: The maximum tuition fee contribution for "home" (including other EU students) studying in England, Wales and Northern Ireland (and for students from England, Wales and Northern Ireland, who are studying in Scotland), if they are assessed as eligible for fee support, will be £1,050 in the next academic year (2000–01). Universities may charge fees to other students at higher rates. To qualify for "home" fee status, a student must normally meet certain conditions, including having been ordinarily resident in the United Kingdom (or the European Economic Area for EU nationals) for three years on the relevant date closest to the beginning of their course. However, no part of that three year-period can have been wholly or mainly for the purpose of receiving full-time education.

Public support towards tuition fees is not repayable. Because of the system of income-assessment around a third of home and EU students make no contribution to tuition fees.

This answer covers Northern Ireland (given the suspension of devolved government there) but tuition fees for Scottish-domiciled and EU students studying in Scotland are a matter for the Scottish Executive and Scottish Parliament.

Key Stage 4

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the Key Stage 4 results for 16-year-olds in English, maths and science for each year since 1992 (a) for Shropshire and (b) nationally; and if he will make a statement. [111915]

Mr. Wicks: The GCSE is the main means of assessing the performance of pupils at the end of Key Stage 4 and these results for (a) Shropshire and (b) nationally are shown in the table. The figures show the number of 16-year-olds achieving the specified grades, as percentages of those 16-year-olds entered for the relevant GCSE subjects.

New Deal (Scotland)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the number of businesses in (a) Inverclyde, (b) Renfrewshire and (c) Scotland which have participated in the New Deal; and if he will make a statement. [111502]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 28 February 2000]: Employers across Scotland are strongly committed to New Deal, with almost 11,000 signing New Deal Agreements to date, and many others recruiting New Dealers into unsubsidised jobs (for which Agreements are not required) or supporting the Programme in other ways. In Inverclyde and Renfrewshire 417 employers have signed Agreements (Agreement figures are not broken down below the level of New Deal Delivery Units).

Class Sizes

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the relationship between (a) class sizes in the years when (i) Key Stage assessment (ii) GCSEs, (iii) A-levels, and (iv) equivalent vocational training are taken and (b) pupil performance as measured at each of those stages; and if he will make a statement. [112434]

Ms Estelle Morris: The evidence, including that from Ofsted, indicates that class size is most important at Key Stage 1. That is why we have pledged to reduce the size of infant classes. The pledge will ensure that all children benefit from infant classes of 30 or below, and will help to give young pupils the important start they need.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what the size of classes was in (a) Hereford and (b) nationwide, in each of the last four academic years, leading up to (i) each Key Stage assessment, (ii) GCSEs, (iii) A-levels and (iv) vocational courses equivalent to A-levels; and if he will make a statement. [112437]

Ms Estelle Morris: Information on class sizes is not available in the form requested. The available information on class sizes from January 1996 to 1999 is shown in the table. A class size count for January 2000 is currently being undertaken and national estimates are expected to be published in a Statistical First Release in April.

The most recent count of infant classes was carried out in September 1999. Figures derived from this count show that the average size of infant classes taught by one teacher in maintained primary schools in the Hereford Parliamentary constituency was 23.7 pupils per class. The Government have pledged to limit to 30 the size of infant classes for five, six and seven-year-olds by September 2001 at the latest. We are well on course to deliver that pledge.

Ex-ASTRA Civil Servants

Mr. Dawson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many ex-ASTRA civil servants have been re-employed in the Civil Service under the reinstatement initiative; of those reinstated what were their grades (a) before privatisation and (b) on reinstatement; and how many have subsequently left the Civil Service and on what terms. [112152]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 1 March 2000]: The information sought is not held centrally and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. However, reinstatement is the return to work of former established civil servants in the same permanent grade as when they left the Civil Service. All former established staff have the right to apply for reinstatement.

School Terms

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to review the pattern of school terms and school holidays; and if he will make a statement. [112691]

Ms Estelle Morris: Decisions about the number, length and dates of school terms and holidays are taken locally, not by central Government. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has no plans to change these arrangements.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Chevening Scholarship Programme

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of the Chevening scholarship programme for (a) young Chinese officials and (b) others. [112012]

Mr. Hain: The FCO's Chevening Scholarships programme in China is the largest in the world, with more than 100 Scholars in 1999–2000. The Scholars (future "leaders, decision makers and opinion formers") come from a wide variety of backgrounds, including government, business and NGOs. Our survey of departing students shows that 97 per cent. of Chinese Scholars in 1999 rated their academic experience in the UK as "excellent" or "good", and 97 per cent. rated the experience of their stay in the UK as "excellent" or "good". Chevening Scholars coming to the UK from China acquire new knowledge and skills, and learn more about our way of life and values. In future, as their careers progress, we hope they will tend to look to the UK for ideas, technology, trade and investment. China has been designated as one of the target countries for the Prime Minister's initiative to attract more international students to the UK. As a result, we plan to expand the Chevening programme in China in the coming academic year, by at least 15 scholars.

Abkhazia

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the joint OSCE/UN fact finding mission will visit the Gali region of Georgia; and if he will make a statement on Her Majesty's Government's efforts to resolve the issue of Abkhazia. [112128]

Mr. Vaz: No date has yet been fixed for the OSCE fact-finding mission to Gali. Her Majesty's Government are working actively within the Friends of the Secretary-General group to help find a solution to the conflict in Abkhazia, Georgia. The Secretary of State discussed the situation in Abkhazia with President Shevardnadze and others during his visit to Georgia on 23–24 February.

Mrs. Layla Zana

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what views he has expressed to the Turkish Government regarding its refusal to allow members of the European Parliament to visit Mrs. Layla Zana in prison; and if he will make a statement. [111986]

Mr. Vaz: We regret that the Chairman of the EU/Turkey Joint Parliamentary Committee, Daniel Cohn Bendit, was refused access to Layla Zana in late February, and have raised this in discussions with the Turkish authorities. We remain hopeful that a meeting may be possible at a later date.

As referred to in my parliamentary answer of 1 December 1999, Official Report, column 262W, the British Embassy in Ankara closely monitors the case of Mrs. Zana.

Kosovo

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the support given by the Kosovo Liberation Army to Albanian protesters in Mitrovica on 21 February. [112111]

Mr. Vaz: The Kosovo Liberation Army was demilitarised in September 1999, in accordance with UN Security Council Resolution 1244. We are aware of press reports of Kosovo Albanian extremists being involved in disturbances in Mitrovica.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of the progress that the European Union has made in its economic and infrastructure efforts in Kosovo; [112094]

(2) what recent assessment he has made of the progress that has been achieved in the civil implementation of the UN Security Council Resolution 1244 in Kosovo; [112091]

(3) what assessment he has made of the progress made in establishing and overseeing the development of the first stage of provisional democratic self-governing institutions in Kosovo. [112092]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer I gave to the right hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Maude) on 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 133W.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the security situation in (a) Prizren, (b) Pec and (c) Gnjilane; and if he will make a statement. [112112]

Mr. Vaz: Although we keep the security situation across the province under review, we have not made specific assessments of the situation in Prizren, Pec or Gnjilane, which are respectively in the German, Italian and US-led KFOR sectors. We understand, however, that the situation in Gnjilane is currently tense, with isolated incidents of violence.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement concerning recent Serbian protests in Kosovska Mitrovica at KFOR troop activity. [112102]

Mr. Vaz: We condemn any attacks on KFOR, whose mission is to provide security for all people in Kosovo.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what estimate his Department has made of the policing requirement for (a) Pristina, (b) Kosovska Mitrovica and (c) Kosovo. [112109]

Mr. Hain: The UN Secretary-General has estimated the international policing requirement for Kosovo as 4,718 officers. We accept this. We have agreed to double our own contribution as part of the international effort to meet this requirement.

Within Kosovo, UNMIK are best placed to decide on the day-to-day operational requirements for the various regions, including Pristina and Mitrovica. These requirements are kept under continuous review, and adjustments made as necessary. For example additional police officers, as well as KFOR troops, were sent recently to Mitrovica.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British troops were involved in activity in Kosovska Mitrovica between 15 and 22 February. [112106]

Mr. Vaz: Two hundred and thirty troops from the Royal Green Jackets were involved in security operations in Kosovska Mitrovica between 15 and 22 February.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment his Department has made of the support given by the Government of President Milosevic to Serbian protesters in Kosovska Mitrovica. [112110]

Mr. Vaz: We have no evidence of any direct support given by the Government of President Milosovic to stirring up trouble in Mitrovica.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when his Department was informed of the mass protests by ethnic Kosovo Albanians which began on 21 February in Kosovska Mitrovica. [112105]

Mr. Vaz: My Department was informed of the news when it broke on 21 February.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress made in the re-establishment of an independent, impartial and multi-ethnic judiciary in Kosovo. [112096]

Mr. Vaz: I am satisfied with the progress being made on the re-establishment of an independent, impartial, multi-ethnic and effective judiciary in Kosovo and that it is being given a very high priority. The UN Mission in Kosovo has changed the basis of applicable law to that which applied in 1989, before Milosevic removed Kosovo's autonomy, as the Kosovo Albanians and others were reluctant to accept the discriminatory Yugoslav and Serbian laws. This helps recruit local multi-ethnic judges and prosecutors and 130 were appointed in January alone. Council of Europe legal experts are reviewing Kosovo's laws to establish whether they are in conformity with internationally recognised standards. The OSCE's Judicial Training Unit is providing intensive training to local judicial personnel.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he has made of progress made by UNMIK in setting up the administration of social services, utilities and the consolidation of the rule of law in Kosovo; [112058]

(2) what assessment he has made of progress made by UNMIK in the establishment and consolidation of its authority and the creation of interim UNMIK-managed structures in Kosovo. [112061]

Mr. Vaz [holding answer 28 February 2000]: UNMIK inherited a massive challenge in June 1999: nothing less than the rebuilding of society in Kosovo. The UK has made a substantial contribution, including to emergency repair of utilities. We gave US$1 million to pay the salaries of utilities workers for the UN Mission last summer.

The Kosovo Albanians and Serbs have now both agreed to join the UN Mission in the new Joint Interim Administrative Structure (JIAS). This will involve joint departments, each headed jointly by a member of UNMIK and by a Kosovar. One of these, which is already being established, deals with Health and Social Welfare. UNMIK have recently recruited more than 300 judges and prosecutors to put in place an effective legal system.

UNMIK

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the contributions made by (a) Her Majesty's Government and (b) the European Union to the manning and resources of UNMIK. [112905]

Mr. Vaz: The UK and its EU partners continue to make a major contribution to the international effort in Kosovo. The main elements of the UK's bilateral contribution include:

60 officers for the international police presence, a contribution we are now going to double;

40 police officers training the future Kosovo Police Service;

30 civilian secondees working on human rights/rule of law, democratisation, media development, elections and administration;

DFID has 50 staff working on the ground in Kosovo.

UK pays 6.25 per cent. of UNMIK assessed contributions. Our contribution for June 1999-June 2000 is £15.7 million. We pledged $13 million in the second half of 1999 on activities in support of UNMIK:

$4.8 million for upgrading Pristina airport.

$1 million for salary costs for utility workers.

$1 million on prisons and the use of an Emergency Engineering Unit to help repair prison facilities.

$3 million for activities related to the transformation of the Kosovo Liberation Army and $1 million for socially valuable projects to be carried out by the Kosovo Protection Corps.

$2.9 million on other support including the UN Mine Action and Co-ordination Centre, the provision of a health management team for Pristina Hospital and providing experts to the UNMIK Civil Administration pillar.

In November 1999, we pledged a further $10 million in budgetary support to UNMIK.

A UK Scenes of Crime team (up to 20 personnel) carried out forensic investigations in Kosovo last year. Work will be resumed in the spring.

EU has agreed to provide 360 meuro to Kosovo in 2000 most of it for reconstruction and in budgetary support to UNMIK, with around 50 meuro in humanitarian aid. The EU is providing emergency budget support to UNMIK through accelerated procedures.

The EU Task Force (which has been strengthened to become the EU Reconstruction Agency) is responsible for the delivery of EU assistance. Since starting work in July 1999, it has disbursed over 52 million euros.

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the progress that UNMIK has made in (a) the establishment and consolidation of its authority, (b) the creation of interim UNMIK-managed structures, (c) setting up the administration of social services and utilities and (d) the consolidation of the rule of law in Kosovo. [112093]

Mr. Vaz: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer given to the right hon. Member for Horsham (Mr. Maude) on 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 400W.

Hungary

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received from Hungary concerning ethnic Hungarians in Vojvodina. [112107]

Mr. Vaz: We have not received any recent official representations from Hungary concerning ethnic Hungarians in Vojvodina. We are aware of Hungarian concerns about the situation in Serbia and we share the view that the promotion of democratic change in FRY/Serbia will be the best way of helping minorities within that country.

Danube

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assistance the Government are giving to those countries affected by the cyanide contamination of the Danube. [111972]

Mr. Vaz: We have followed with concern reports of the pollution in the Danube caused by a serious spill of cyanide-contaminated water from a gold mine in Western Romania. There is no UK involvement in this disaster nor have we provided any assistance directly to those countries affected. We support the EU initiative in calling for an investigation into the causes of this pollution. We also support the EU principle that the polluter should pay.

The European Commission has confirmed that it will provide some practical assistance. The EU Commissioner for the environment, Margot Wallstroem, visited the region in February to assess the damage and what help might be offered. The EU is to set up a working committee of international experts and is ready to send experts to the region to help if necessary. No decision has yet been taken on financial assistance.

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations his Department has received from (a) commercial, (b) charitable and (c) community organisations and from (d) foreign Governments regarding the cancellation of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress and the collapse of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. [112720]

Mr. Hain: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has received no representations regarding the cancellation of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress and the collapse of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Intervention Board

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the review of regional service centres for the Intervention Board Executive Agency began; how much it has cost; when he expects it to report; and if he will list all the present sites of the Intervention Board Executive Agency with the whole-time equivalent staff numbers employed at each site. [111351]

Ms Quin [holding answer 22 February 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Minister commissioned PricewaterhouseCoopers (PwC) to review the administration of payments under the CAP subsidy schemes. The review, which began last September, covered the payments made through MAFF's nine Regional Service Centres (RSCs) and through the Intervention Board Executive Agency (IBEA). PwC submitted their report at the end of January and my right hon. Friend is now considering their recommendation that the payment functions of MAFF and IBEA should be merged. Any significant reorganisation of MAFF's RSCs and IBEA will require new funding, and the case for this will be considered in the context of the Spending Review 2000.

PwC's fees for the study which was completed in January amounted to approximately £300,000 (excluding VAT and expenses).

The Intervention Board currently operates form two main sites, in Reading and Newcastle-upon-Tyne. Some control staff are also based at outstations in England based at Bristol, Harrogate, Wolverhampton and Cambridge. The whole-time equivalent staff numbers employed at each site are as follows:

	Number
Reading	1,002
Newcastle	[1]293
Bristol	22
Harrogate	12
Wolverhampton	17
Cambridge	9
Total	[1]1,355

[1] Includes 15 control staff

BSE

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the underspend in the Treasury's budget for BSE-related expenditures. [111707]

Ms Quin: There is currently no underspend in this Department's budget for BSE-related expenditure.

NORTHERN IRELAND

H-blocks

Mr. William Ross: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what savings arose as each of the H-blocks in the Maze Prison was emptied of prisoners. [102160]

Mr. Ingram: In 1998–99, there was a reduction of £0.33 million in the budget operating costs for which HMP Maze was directly responsible. Currently operating costs are £1.10 million less than the 1998–99 budget.

In addition, there was a 26 per cent. reduction in staffing at the prison between June 1998 and September 1999.

Mrs. Rosemary Nelson

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions the issue of the personal security of Mrs. Rosemary Nelson was raised in meetings between the Garvaghy Road Residents Coalition and officials of the Northern Ireland Office and the Prime Minister's Office. [103817]

Mr. Ingram: The Government's long-standing policy is that they discuss security with the individual concerned and not with third parties. The Committee on the Administration of Justice, who wrote on behalf of Rosemary Nelson on 10 August 1999 were informed of this and were given details of how Rosemary Nelson might apply to the Northern Ireland Office's Key Person's Protection Scheme. She did not do so. Additionally, where the police have intelligence of a specific threat, which they did not in this case, they will notify the individual concerned and offer advice on security.

Paramilitary Violence

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the recorded number of incidents of violence caused by paramilitary groups during 1999; and if he will make a statement. [111428]

Mr. Ingram: The following tables show the security related incidents in Northern Ireland for the period 1 January to 31 December 1999.

	Number of incidents
Bombing	[1]100

[1] Excludes incidents involving incendiaries, petrol bombs or hoax bombs

Casualties as a result of paramilitary style attacks

Shootings	47	26

Recycling

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what percentage of documentation used by his Department is (a) made from recycled paper and (b) collected for recycling. [111605]

Mr. Ingram: The information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Decommissioning

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a further statement about decommissioning of illegally held arms in Northern Ireland. [111405]

Mr. Ingram: There is no doubt that we have experienced a number of setbacks in recent weeks. However, the maintenance of the IRA cease-fire, as General de Chastelain has acknowledged, represents an important step and has contributed greatly to the peace process. It is important that we build upon that.

General de Chastelain's last report gave some grounds for optimism, but it is imperative that we have clarity on the issue of decommissioning before we can restore devolved government in Northern Ireland. We are all agreed that the Good Friday Agreement has to be implemented in full. The obligations on all sides have not changed.

Our priority is to work together with the Irish Government and the Northern Ireland parties to restore the institutions quickly, and to see that decommissioning begins as soon as possible. What we all need to do now, after recent disappointments, is to move on together without any recrimination and without any precondition. What is important is that substantive progress is made now. The next step is to decommission weapons, and that must happen soon.

Ballymena Government Training Centre

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the future of Ballymena Government Training Centre, Co. Antrim indicating the steps being taken to redeploy instructors, administrative staff and industrial staff employed at the Centre and the likely number of redundancies in each group of employees. [112406]

Mr. Ingram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its Chief Executive. Mr. Ian Walters. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Ian Walters to Mr. Roy Beggs, dated 1 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me, as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, to reply to your question about the future of Ballymena Training Centre, the steps being taken to re-deploy staff, and the likely number of redundancies.

Following a review of training centres and Further Education colleges, the then Minister, Mr. McFall, confirmed in September 1999 that planning would proceed on the merger of the training centres and FE colleges. Plans are underway for Ballymena Training Centre to become fully integrated into the North East Institute of Further and Higher Education and the aim is for the merger to take effect in September 2000.

To help facilitate the merger process, the Department, acting through the Agency, has introduced a voluntary redundancy scheme for training centre staff in the instructional and industrial grades. In Ballymena, 11 staff out of a total of 30 staff have applied for and been granted voluntary redundancy. There will be a further opportunity for staff in these grades to apply for the voluntary redundancy scheme in the next few months.

Arrangements are being discussed for instructional and industrial staff who prefer to transfer to employment with North East Institute, to do so with appropriate protection of their employment rights.

I expect that all administrative staff in the training centre will be re-deployed to other parts of the Department or, perhaps, the wider Northern Ireland Civil Service. There is no need for a voluntary redundancy scheme for this group of staff.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Departmental Expenditure Limit

Jean Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what changes there are to his Department's departmental expenditure limit. [113148]

Mr. Mandelson: Subject to Parliamentary approval of the necessary Revised Spring Supplementary Estimate the Departmental Expenditure Limit for the Northern Ireland Office will be increased by £4,221,000 from £1,025,277,000 to £1,029,498,000. This is to fund expenditure arising from the Northern Ireland Act 2000. Pending that approval, expenditure of £4,221,000 will be met by a repayable advance from the Contingencies Fund.

This increase will be offset by a reduction in expenditure of the Northern Ireland Departments and will therefore not add to the total of planned Public Expenditure.

CABINET OFFICE

Drugs

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent appointments she has made to support her work on the Government's anti-drugs strategy. [112384]

Mr. Ian McCartney: My right hon. Friend has made no recent appointments in this area.

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) on what projects the UK Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator will work with the hon. Member for Witney (Mr. Woodward); [112383]

(2) what Civil Service support will be made available to the hon. Member for Witney in his work in relation to drugs and children. [112385]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator has been asked to consider what more could be done to co-ordinate work on drugs in schools. This involves discussions with the Department for Education and Employment and organisations such as the Metropolitan Police and Childline. In the light of his experience with Childline, my hon. Friend the Member for Witney (Mr. Woodward) has met the UK anti-drugs co-ordinator on this issue. There is no question of civil service support being made available to the hon. Member for Witney.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mozambique

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the emergency help sent so far to Mozambique during the recent flooding; and if she will make a statement. [112694]

Clare Short: My Department deployed two humanitarian specialists to the region during the initial stages of the flooding on 11 February. They conducted rapid assessments and liaised with the Mozambican authorities and humanitarian organisations to help identify priority needs. We despatched a consignment of over 400 tents on 12 February from the UK to Maputo for the Red Cross to distribute for emergency shelter to those made homeless. We also supported the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Coordination Team who are assisting the Mozambican authorities with the targeting and coordination of the relief efforts. Given the deteriorating situation over the last week we redeployed a humanitarian specialist to Mozambique to work alongside permanent DFID staff in Maputo.

We have mobilised 11 helicopters, including four from the RAF, to assist with the rescue and relief effort. We have also provided US$1 million to the World Food Programme to support the continued operations of helicopters from the South African Defence Force. To assist with the effective tasking of all helicopters, we have seconded a logistics expert into the World Food Programme. But helicopters are not the total answer. We are also deploying 70 boats and specialist trained crews, together with a number of large capacity self-inflating life rafts. DFID has already contributed over £5.8 million for rescue and immediate relief including the provision of shelter, water, sanitation and health support. This funding has been channelled through the United Nations Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, UNICEF, World Food Programme, Red Cross, ActionAid, Oxfam, Save the Children Fund and World Vision. These activities are being coordinated with the Mozambican authorities. We stand ready to provide further assistance.

HEALTH

NHS Dentistry

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of the level of demand for NHS dentistry in the next five years; [109828]

(2) what estimate he has made of the number of dentists required to meet current demand for NHS treatment; [109855]

(3) what estimate he has made of the number of patients waiting to see an NHS dentist; [109866]

(4) what is the average waiting time to see an NHS dentist in Shropshire. [109835]

Mr. Hutton: The number of dentists in the General Dental Service in England at December 1999 (the latest date for which figures are available) was 17,746, an all time high and an increase of 480 from the previous year. Access problems are largely attributable to increases in the proportion of the time which dentists spend treating private patients and in the numbers of dentists working part-time. We therefore believe that we need to increase the level of dentists' commitment to the National Health Service. The Government will discuss with the profession a scheme to encourage and reward commitment to the NHS, paying out about £17 million a year.

Plans for the future direction and development of NHS Dentistry have been made taking into account past, present and future trends in registrations and demand for NHS dentistry. Information on the number of patients waiting to see a NHS dentist, or the length of waiting time for dental services in Shropshire, is not available centrally. For information on protocol for waiting times at the Shropshire Dental Access Centre, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given to the hon. Member for Runnymede and Weybridge (Mr. Hammond) on 19 January 2000, Official Report, column 511W.

Dentists

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to encourage competition amongst dentists. [112321]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 28 February 2000]: The NHS expects all its dentists to provide a high quality and reliable service. Patients should be told whether they can expect to pay the standard charge for this service and, if so, how much a course of treatment will be. On top of this, we welcome the initiative of individual dentists who attract patients by offering exceptional service in some way.

Old Church Hospital

Mr. Pickles: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many beds there will be at the proposed new hospital at Old Church; and what is the current number of beds in the present hospital at Old Church. [111953]

Mr. Denham: There are currently 463 beds at Old Church hospital. The Trust has submitted proposals which are currently under consideration by the London Regional Office of the NHS Executive to provide 711 beds at Old Church Park.

Adoption

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to reform the system for the adoption of children; and if he will make a statement. [111780]

Mr. Hutton: Through the Government's Quality Protects Programme we aim to develop a modern adoption system which puts the interests of the child first and provides a sensitive and efficient service. My right hon. Friend the Prime Minister is reviewing with ministerial colleagues how we can build on Quality Protects, moving further and faster to secure our aim of maximising the use of adoption for all children for whom it is appropriate and minimising delay. My right hon. Friend will make further announcements on the work programme in due course.

Long-term Care

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if nursing care funded by the Government for those in long-term care will be restricted to that given by trained nurses; [112004]

(2) if he intends to adopt the definition of nursing care set out in the report of the Royal Commission on Long-Term Care. [112003]

Mr. Hutton: No options for change have been ruled in or out at this stage. The Department of Health held a seminar on 1 March to discuss approaches to defining nursing care. Participants included representatives of professional and managerial organisations, private sector providers and voluntary organisations representing users of services. The issues raised at the seminar will help to inform our consideration of national standards for staffing levels in nursing homes and our final decision on the future funding of long-term care, following the conclusion of the spending review.

Crowns and Bridges

Mr. Rendel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the number of claims for (a) precious metal based and (b) non-precious metal-based crowns and bridges in each of the last three years. [111724]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 29 February 2000]: The tables show the number of claims scheduled for payment for crowns and bridges in precious and non-precious metal carried out in England from 1996–97 to 1998–99.

NHS Staff

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) numbers of and (b) cost to the NHS of employing agency nurses (i) nationally and (ii) by region for each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [112396]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 1 March 2000]: Information on the number of agency staff is not available centrally.

The table shows the total expenditure on non-National Health Service nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff in England, for the financial years 1994–95 to 1998–99. These figures include all agency staff and any staff not directly employed by individual NHS trusts and health authorities.

Correspondence

Mr. Arbuthnot: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will reply to the letter of 29 October 1999 from the right hon. Member for North-East Hampshire regarding Dr. Egerton, a constituent. [112540]

Ms Stuart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health, replied to the right hon. Member on 29 February.

Breast Implants

Mr. Brake: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what progress has been made in implementing the recommendations made by the Independent Review Group set up to examine the health risks of silicone gel breast implants relating to (a) information about benefits and risks of surgery for patients undergoing cosmetic breast augmentation surgery, (b) advertisements promoting breast implant surgery, (c) a consent form which incorporates the issues to be discussed between surgeons and women considering breast implantation, (d) measures to ensure that standards of care in private clinics, (e) registration of details of each breast implant and explant, (f) reporting breast implant-related adverse incidents, (g) information to patients on the likely financial implications of breast implant surgery and (h) a steering group to organise research. [112549]

Mr. Denham: A group chaired by the noble Baroness Emerton of Tunbridge Wells is producing an information booklet for women who are contemplating having breast implants. The booklet will provide expanded information on the issues identified by the Independent Review Group, including consent and financial implications. This will be available shortly.

There have been discussions between the Advertising Standards Authority and Departmental officials about advertising, and we are currently considering how best to take this matter forward.

The use of such forms is good practice, and in 1992 the Department issued model consent forms which can be adapted by National Health Service trusts for any procedure. This will be supported by the information leaflet which will give advice to women on the questions they will need to ask surgeons before giving consent.

We are committed to introducing new and modern regulatory arrangements for independent healthcare provision through the Care Standards Bill, which is currently before Parliament. Copies of the Government's response to the Health Committee report of the regulation of private healthcare are available in the Library.

The group's recommendations on registration were about ensuring good clinical practice. Measures are also in hand, through initiatives such as the Care Standards Agency and the National Institute for Clinical Excellence, to increase compliance with good clinical practice in both the public and the private sector.

The Medical Devices Agency guidance was published last year on the reporting of adverse incidents. This was circulated to liaison officers in the public and the private sectors, to all members of the British Association of Plastic Surgeons and the British Association of Aesthetic Plastic Surgeons, and to manufacturers. Copies are available in the Library.

A steering group has been established within the Department to identify suitable approaches that could lead to research of high scientific quality into breast implants and cosmetic surgery. The group's membership includes a consultant plastic surgeon, an Emeritus Professor of immunology, a representative from industry and the Chairman of the NHS Health Technology Assessment programme.

Non-medical Supplies

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which private firms were invited to tender for the supply of non-medical supplies and equipment to NHS trusts in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to date. [112570]

Mr. Denham: This information is not available because National Health Service trusts are not required to report to the Department which firms they have invited to tender.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much NHS trusts spent on non-medical supplies and equipment in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to date. [112541]

Mr. Denham: Information is not available for 1999–2000.

This represents the net book value of equipment assets acquired using both exchequer funds and from donations in the year. It also includes transfers from assets under construction where these have been completed in the year. Insufficient information is available to split the category into medical and non-medical equipment. This net book value does not equal the actual cash expenditure. Cash expenditure just on equipment is not available.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what targets were set for savings to be made in the purchase of non-medical supplies and equipment by NHS trusts in (a) 1997–98, (b) 1998–99 and (c) 1999–2000 to date. [112571]

Mr. Denham: National Health Service trusts were not set targets for savings in the purchase of non-medical supplies and equipment in 1997–98, 1998–99 or 1999–2000.

The NHS Supplies Authority has been set purchasing targets covering all areas it influences—medical and non-medical goods and services. Those targets and achievements are set out in the table:

Ambulances

Mr. Edwards: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will make a statement on the breakdown on the M4 motorway of a St. John Ambulance under contract to the London Ambulance Service carrying a patient awaiting a heart and lung transplant on 19 February; [112626]

(2) what requirements there are for ambulances carrying patients long distances to carry spare tyres. [112627]

Ms Stuart: The breakdown of the ambulance carrying a patient from London to Wales was regrettable, but I understand that another vehicle was speedily provided and the patient suffered no adverse effects from this incident. It is policy among all ambulance services not to carry a spare wheel. A replacement vehicle was sent to ensure proper transport for the patient.

Elderly People

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what data he has collated for (i) 1997–98 and (ii) 1998–99 on the indicators in the Government's poverty audit Opportunity for All relating to (i) intensive home care for people over 65 years of age in England and (ii) community based care for people over 65 years of age. [112156]

Mr. Hutton: The data for these indicators, which are also part of the Personal Social Services Performance Assessment Framework, were published on 24 November 1999 in a summary form in Social Services Performance 1998–99 and in detail in the form of computer tables on the Department of Health's internet site (reference: www.doh.gov.uk/paf/). The data show that in England (i) 8.4 households per 1,000 head of population aged 65 or over received intensive home care (more than 10 contact hours and 6 or more visits during the survey week) in England in 1998–99. Comparable data are not available for 1997–98 due to changes in the data collection. (ii) 71 people aged 65 or over per 1,000 head of population aged 65 or over received community based services in 1998–99. The comparable number for 1997–98 was 81.

Cleft Lip and Palate Services

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consultations he has had with patients and their families about the future provision of cleft lip and palate centres. [112730]

Mr. Denham: The Chief Executive of the Cleft Lip and Palate Association (CLAPA) was a member of the Clinical Standards Advisory Group that reviewed cleft lip and palate services. He is currently a member of the Cleft Implementation Group. Representatives of cleft support groups have been involved in proposals in all regions and the Deputy Chief Medical Officer attended the CLAPA's Annual General Meeting in October last year.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what expert qualifications and experience members of his Clinical Standards Advisory Group have on cleft lip and palate. [112733]

Mr. Denham: The information is contained in Appendix A of the Clinical Standards Advisory Group on Cleft Lip and/or Palate (available in the Library) which lists the members of the CSAG committee established to look into this. The cleft committee was chaired by Professor John Murray, Dean of the Dental School at the University of Newcastle.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of his Department's Clinical Standards Advisory Group on cleft lip and palate. [112732]

Mr. Denham: The members of the sub group of the Clinical Standards Advisory Group which looked at cleft lip and palate services are listed in appendix A of the CSAG Report on cleft lip and palate services, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which hospitals his Department is assessing as future cleft lip and palate centres; and when he will announce his decision on the future locations of such centres. [112731]

Mr. Denham: Decisions about the designation of specialist cleft lip and palate centres are matters for Regional Specialist Commissioning Groups, in accordance with the commissioning framework issued in the Health Services Circular HSC 1998/238, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the regional specialised services commission groups and the relevant sub-groups charged with taking forward the Government's plans for the future provision of cleft lip and palate services. [112729]

Mr. Denham: The information requested can be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, it should be noted that Regional Specialised Commissioning Groups (RSCGs) have been established in all the English health regions, and Regional Directors of the NHS are accountable for their performance. The chairs of the RSCGs are as follows:

Region	Chair
Northern and Yorkshire	Barry Fisher, Chief Executive of North Yorkshire Health Authority
North-West	Professor Maggie Pearson, North-West Regional Office
Trent	Dick Stockford, Director of Policy Development, Trent Regional Office
West Midlands	Henry Foster, Chief Executive, Dudley Health Authority
London	John James, Chief Executive, Kensington, Chelsea and Westminster Health Authority
Eastern	Chris Heginbotham, Chief Executive, East and North Herts Health Authority

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Concessionary Fares

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what concessionary fare schemes for public transport are available to blind people. [111974]

Mr. Hill: The most recent comprehensive information available to the Department comes from a survey of the position in 1995–96. Of the 331 local authorities which responded to that survey, 299 provided a concessionary travel scheme for blind people. The areas covered by these schemes included Greater London and all the six metropolitan areas. At least 32 of the schemes provided free travel; the remainder offered a range of different concessions.

Mr. Coaker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact of the payment of Disability Living Allowance to blind people and the disabled on entitlement to local authority concessionary fare schemes. [111975]

Mr. Hill: A survey of the position in 1995–96 indicated some differences between local authorities as to eligibility for concessionary travel for people in receipt of Disability Living Allowance. Last year the Department of Social Security and the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions issued a guidance note to local authorities suggesting that concessionary travel should not be refused to people on the grounds that they were in receipt of the mobility element of the Disability Living Allowance.

Animals (Mange)

Mr. McCabe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which public bodies have specific powers covering the control of animals with mange. [112014]

Mr. Mullin: This is not a matter for my Department.

Thameslink

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 21 February 2000, Official Report, column 706W, when he expects to be able to publish the shadow Strategic Rail Authority's proposals for additional capacity on the Bedford to London section of the Thameslink route which will not be dependent on the Thameslink 2000 project. [112425]

Mr. Hill: Thameslink's initial proposals for additional capacity were set out in "Thameslink—A New Partnership for the Millennium" which they published in March 1999. Discussion of these and other proposals to enhance capacity on the Bedford to London section is continuing with the Franchising Director, who will make an announcement in due course, I have asked the Franchising Director to keep my hon. Friend directly informed of progress.

Objective 1, Merseyside

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress in negotiations between his Department and the European Commission on the Objective 1 Special Programme Document for Merseyside. [112942]

Ms Armstrong: We are making good progress in our negotiations with the European Commission on the Objective 1 Single Programme Document for Merseyside. The European Commission is keen to ensure that confirmation of the acceptability of the Single Programme Document is provided by 31 March.

Funding Schemes

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the funding schemes administered by his Department, indicating the total funds of each scheme and the administration costs of each scheme as a percentage of the total funds. [112494]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 2 March 2000]: Details of the schemes administered by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions and information about the level of funding is given each year in the Departmental Annual Report. The 1999 Annual Report was presented to Parliament on 25 March 1999 (Cm 4204). The Department does not record its administration costs at the level of individual schemes.

Rail Franchise (North England)

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met the Chairman of the Shadow Strategic Rail Authority to discuss the redrawing of the Rail Franchise for the North of England; and if he will make a statement. [112784]

Mr. Hill: The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has not met the Chairman of the shadow Strategic Rail Authority to discuss redrawing the rail franchise for the North of England, but the Franchising Director will consider this together with other relevant matters when replacing the franchise in that area.

Air Rage

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many incidents classified as air rage have been reported in each year since 1990; and if he will make a statement. [113027]

Mr. Mullin: Data are not available for that period. Reports of disruptive incidents on UK airlines have been collected since April 1999. An analysis of the data for the seven months to October 1999 recorded 796 incidents, 39 of which were considered serious. The analysis is available in the House of Commons Library.

Homelessness

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish the amounts allocated to homelessness over the past 10 years and the amounts allocated to rough sleeping over the past 10 years. [112810]

Mr. Mullin: Since 1990 my Department has allocated the following amounts to tackle single homelessness and rough sleeping.

£12.1 million (single homelessness)

£96 million (rough sleeping)

1993–96

£19 million (single homelessness)

£86 million (rough sleeping)

1996–99

£23.8 million (single homelessness)

£73 million (rough sleeping)

£196 million (Rough Sleepers Unit).

The Rough Sleepers Unit was established in my Department in April 1999. This Unit has an integrated budget combining the separate single homelessness and rough sleeping programme budgets as well as budgets previously administered by other Departments.

Government implemented a special homelessness initiative in the early 1990s to tackle homelessness pressures in London and the South-East which was allocated partly to local authorities and partly to housing associations (through the Housing Corporation). The local authority allocations were £112 million in 1990–91 and £126.7 million in 1991–92.

Local housing authorities have statutory obligations to assist homeless persons under part VII of the Housing Act 1996 (and formerly under part III of the Housing Act 1985). This includes unintentionally homeless households with dependant children, and those who are vulnerable, totalling almost one million households between 1991–99. Funding for local authorities' activities under these provisions is provided as part of the annual local government finance settlement and is unhypothecated.

Water Industry

Mr. Browne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what arrangements he has made for protecting vulnerable customers under the Water Industry Act 1999. [113477]

Mr. Meacher: The Water Industry (Charges) (Vulnerable Groups) Regulations 1999 were made under the Water Industry Act 1999 and laid on 22 December 1999. The regulations offer protection to customers who might face hardship affording their bills because they use large amounts of water for essential purposes and pay on a measured basis. Customers will qualify for assistance if they are in receipt of income related benefits or tax credits (Income Support, Income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Working Families Tax Credit, Disabled Person's Tax Credit, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit) and either (a) they have three dependent children under the age of 16; or (b) they have a medical condition requiring significant extra water use (these are defined as kidney failure requiring home dialysis, abdominal stomas, desquamation, weeping skin disease and incontinence).

Customers in these circumstances will be entitled to pay the average charge for the company that supplies them, rather than their actual measured charge. This represents a significant new step to tackle water poverty.

The wording of the 1999 Regulations could have been interpreted as excluding low income customers whose children have qualifying medical conditions. That was not the intention. Therefore the Government have today laid the Water Industry (Charges) (Vulnerable Groups) (Amendment) Regulations 2000 which ensure that low income customers can receive assistance if their children are suffering from a qualifying medical condition. This confirms the Government's commitment to helping families who might face hardship as a result of high essential water use.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Schuman Project

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the UK beneficiaries of the Schuman Project who are (a) lawyers and (b) judges since its inception. [112336]

Mr. Lock: The only available information is contained in the analysis and first assessment on the pilot phases 1997–98 of the Robert Schuman Project published by the European Commission on 1 December 1998. The UK organisations selected to receive funding under the scheme are as listed. A report covering 1999 will be published in the Official Journal in due course.

Eviction and Seizure of Goods

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many court orders for evictions and seizure of goods there were last year in which those to be evicted or to have goods seized no longer lived at the named address; what estimate he has made of the (a) total cost and (b) cost per order; and if he will make a statement. [112435]

Jane Kennedy: Statistics and costs information are not kept in the form requested, and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Family Court Officers

Mr. Livsey: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if the comprehensive induction programme for family court officers includes modules on how to apportion specific periods of parental access in cases of divorce or separation. [112309]

Mr. Boateng: I have been asked to reply.

The national induction programme highlights factors which family court welfare officers need to address in their work with families and their assessments for courts. These factors include the nature, frequency and safety of involvement with each parent following separation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Miners Compensation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry in how many cases payment of claims in respect of chronic bronchitis and emphysema suffered by former miners have been made to their widows. [111414]

Mrs. Liddell: As at 20 February the Department has made bereavement award payments to 1,851 widows amounting to over £16 million. In addition some 2,500 widows of miners who were in receipt of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit for Chronic Bronchitis and Emphysema have received interim payments of £2,000 each.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many medical tests were carried out under the Miners Compensation Scheme in Scotland in (a) 1999, (b) January 2000 and (c) February 2000 to date, on ex-miners seeking compensation for emphysema and other respiratory diseases. [111415]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 22 February 2000]: To date over 3,200 ex-miners have undergone lung function tests at one of the four centres established in Scotland by Healthcall, the company contracted to carry out the lung function programme.

Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library copies of letters sent to or received from British Nuclear Fuels plc on (a) safety at Sellafield and (b) Plutonium MOX fuel, by Ministers and officials in (i) his Department and (ii) other departments, since 10 September 1999. [112354]

Mrs. Liddell: Correspondence on these and other issues is a matter between the Government and the company.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the first commercial quantity of vitrified high level radioactive waste will be repatriated to foreign countries following the reprocessing of imported spent nuclear fuel as Sellafield. [112352]

Mr. Caborn: Dates for the return of wastes arising from BNFL's reprocessing operations will be agreed between the company and the owners of the reprocessed fuel.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will place in the Library copies of all letters sent by Ministers and officials of (a) his Department and (b) other Departments to his Japanese Trade counterpart on the matter of plutonium MOX fuels, British Nuclear Fuels plc or Sellafield since 10 September 1999. [112355]

Mrs. Liddell: Correspondence on these and other issues is a matter between the two Governments. Senior officials from my Department visited Tokyo on 7–10 February to discuss MOX fuel with the Japanese Ministries and power utilities concerned. A joint press statement issued by the two Governments was placed in the Libraries of both Houses on 28 February.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the (a) dates and (b) purpose of visits made by Ministers in his Department to Sellafield since May 1997; and if he will place in the Library copies of speeches and radio and television interviews made by Ministers in association with such visits. [112353]

Mrs. Liddell: My hon. Friend the Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Battle), the then Minister for Energy, visited Sellafield on 15 February 1999 at the invitation of BNFL for a site visit. There was no media involvement associated with this visit.

Dr. Jack Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list, for each (a) director and (b) non-executive director of British Nuclear Fuels plc. their responsibilities in the company and the length of time each has served in that capacity as a board member. [112545]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 March 2000]: The responsibilities, and length of service, of the members of the Board of BNFL are as follows:

Executive Directors

David Bonser, Director, Engineering, Waste Management and Decommissioning Business Group, 30 September 1999 to date.

Ross Chiese, Group Finance Director, 26 August 1994 to date.

Christopher Loughlin, Director, Thorp and Magnox Business Group, 30 September 1999 to date.

John Rimington, 29 January 1998 to date.

Grahame Smith, 1 September 1999 to date.

Note:

John Taylor resigned as Director and Chief Executive of BNFL on 1 March 2000.

Ilisu Dam

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what analysis he has undertaken of the comparative risks, costs and benefits of alternatives to the Ilisu Dam, including (a) energy conservation, (b) other renewable sources, (c) fossil fuels, and (d) nuclear power. [112125]

Mr. Caborn: It is for the project sponsor to carry out any analysis of the comparative risks, costs and benefits of alternatives to a particular project.

Turkey needs to expand its generating capacity considerably. We know that they are looking at coal, gas and oil fired stations elsewhere in Turkey and also at nuclear power. It is natural that they should see hydro power—a clean, renewable energy source which does not involve imports—as having a place in meeting this need.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112664]

Mr. Byers: The annual Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies", provides information on a range of public organisations. The 1997 edition lists those bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions list public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans his Department has to conduct an investigation into the collapse of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. [112735]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 2 March 2000]: It is the policy of my Department not to comment on the affairs of particular companies. If the hon. Member has any information which he feels needs to be brought to my Department's attention he should do so as soon as possible.

MOX Fuel

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 2 March 2000]: BNFL first told my Department of a problem concerning MOX fuel supplied to the German utility, PreussenElektra, on 22 October 1999.

ECGD Projects

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which British (i) banks and (ii) companies are involved in the following ECGD supported projects: (a) ACESITA stainless steel strip mill in Timoteo, (b) the nuclear power project in Qinshan, China, (c) the coal handling export terminal in Tianjin, China, (d) the coal fired power station in Manjung, Malaysia, (e) the Janamanjung Plant in Malaysia, (f) the development loan to the Korean Development Bank and (g) the seventh Airbus A330–200 to the United Arab Emirates. [112473]

Mr. Caborn: The following is the information:

ECGD supported project	Name of bank	Name of company[1]
ACESITA stainless steel strip mill in Timoteo, Brazil
(a) Annealing and Pickling Line	Kleinwort Benson Ltd.	VAI (formerly Davy McKee (Poole) Ltd. trading as Davy International)
(b) Hot Mill	Lloyds TSB (formerly Lloyds Bank plc)	VAI (formerly Davy McKee (Sheffield) Ltd. trading as (Davy International)
The nuclear power project in Qinshan, China
(a) Qinshan Phase II	Standard Chartered Bank	Weir Pumps Ltd.
(b) Qinshan Phase III	Midland Bank plc	Bechtel Ltd.[2]

Line of Credit for Korean Development Bank[4]	HSBC Investment Bank plc	Various[5]
The seventh Airbus A330–200 to United Arab Emirates[6]	HSBC Bank plc	BAE Systems (formerly BAE) and Rolls-Royce

[1] Companies listed are the known lead contractors but there will be many sub-contractors involved on which records are not routinely held by ECGD—for example in the Airbus case typically, some 400 in the BAE Systems supply chain and some 250 in the Rolls-Royce supply chain.

[2] Bechtel Ltd. is acting as procurement agents to procure equipment from a number of British firms (including Weir Pumps and ALSTOM) who have won valuable sub-contract work.

[3] The coal fired power station in Manjung, Malaysia '(d)' and the Janamanjung Plan in Malaysia '(e)' are one and the same project.

[4] A Supplier Credit Finance Facility (SCFLOC) to support the purchase of UK Capital and Semi-Capital UK Goods and UK Services. It is an export credit loan and not a 'development loan'.

[5] No contracts have yet been placed.

[6] Delivered on 28 January 2000—the seventh of seventeen aircraft ordered under a Purchase Agreement dated 18 October 1996.

Utilities Bill

Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to make regulations under the Utilities Bill regarding Consumer Council access to information. [113414]

Mrs. Liddell: The Utilities Bill contains strong information-gathering powers for the Gas and Electricity Consumer Council, to ensure it has access to the information it will need in order to play an influential and informed role on behalf of consumers within the regulatory system.

However, there are a small number of areas, such as information relevant to court proceedings, where confidentiality is legitimate. I have today published a consultation paper setting out the Government's initial thoughts on making regulations defining these areas, subject to Parliament's approval of the relevant provisions of the Utilities Bill.

I have placed copies of the consultation paper in the Libraries of both Houses.

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the right to full employment protection of individuals who become direct employees under IR35. [112987]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The treatment of individuals under tax and national insurance legislation does not determine their status for employment law purposes.

Objective 2 Map

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what changes were made in the draft map of authorities designated for Objective 2 status, including internal ward changes, prior to publication of the final map; and how such changes were made. [111920]

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

New Deal

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will publish New Deal statistics at an individual constituency level regularly. [113410]

Ms Jowell: To support our crusade against youth unemployment, I am pleased to announce that I am today making available information on the progress of the New Deal in each constituency across Great Britain. To put this information into context, some general indicators of local labour markets are also included.

Copies of the individual constituencies' statistics have been placed in the Library. In order to keep Members informed of progress, I will place updates of this information in the Library each quarter.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Pensioners

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the income of the poorest pensioners in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 2000–01. [111811]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows:

The median income among the poorest fifth of pensioner couples in 1997–98 was £126 per week. The median among the poorest fifth of single pensioners was £68 per week.

Notes:

1. Information is for 1997–98, the latest year available. Forecasts are not available for 2000–01.

2. Single pensioners are defined as single (non-cohabiting) people over state pension age (65 for men, 60 for women); pensioner couples are defined as couples (married or cohabiting) where the man is over state pension age.

3. Estimates of incomes refer to net income before housing costs, expressed in July 1997 prices.

4. Estimates are rounded to the nearest £ per week, although they are not necessarily accurate to that degree.

5. For the purposes of this analysis, the 'poorest' are defined as the bottom fifth of the pensioner couples income distribution and the bottom fifth of the single pensioners income distribution, calculated on the net income before housing costs measure. Figures are not available for the distribution of pensioner couples and single pensioners combined.

6. The median income for a given group of people, or couples, is the income of the person or couple exactly in the income distribution. Thus for a given group, half the people or couples have an income higher than the median and have an income lower than the median.

Family Resources Survey 1997–98.

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what (a) current measures are in place and (b) future proposals he has to ensure the senior citizens claim their full benefit entitlement. [111094]

Mr. Rooker: We are committed to taking action to find more effective ways of encouraging eligible pensioners to claim their benefit entitlement. We will be announcing our plans, to encourage pensioners to take-up their entitlement to their minimum income guarantee, shortly.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112659]

Mr. Rooker: The annual Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies", provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions list public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

In this Department no new public bodies have been established since May 1997.

Pensioners (Greater London)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) men and (b) women were in receipt of a State Retirement Pension in each of the parliamentary constituencies in the Greater London area on 1 February. [112617]

Mr. Rooker: Information on the number of men and women in receipt of a State Retirement Pension is not available at parliamentary constituency level. Although information is available on the number of people of pensionable age, this is from the 1991 Census published by the Office for National Statistics.

Miners Compensation

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the payment of compensation for mining-related illness to ex-coal miners will result in a reduction of social security benefits currently paid to them. [112502]

Mr. Bayley: Payments of compensation are treated as capital in the income-related benefits[1]. Where a person who has suffered a personal injury (including an industrial illness) receives a compensation payment, the capital value may be disregarded if it is held in a Trust Fund. Normal rules on income from Trust Funds would apply.

[1] The income-related benefits are Income Support, income-based Jobseeker's Allowance, Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

Correspondence

Mr. Stinchcombe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he will answer the letter from the hon. Member for Wellingborough of 29 June 1999 and provide the breakdown requested of the £22 million stated by the Under-Secretary of State, my hon. Friend the Member for City of York (Mr. Bayley), to have been paid in respect of war pensions for psychiatric illness in 1939, Official Report, 24 February 1999, column 518. [113170]

Mr. Bayley: A reply to most of the matters raised in the letter was sent on 9 September 1999, and a further letter, about war pensions paid in respect of psychiatric illness in 1939, was sent to my hon. Friend the Member for Wellingborough on 26 February 2000.

HEALTH

Accident and Emergency Units

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the accident and emergency units indicating (a) the projected patient attendance expected when built, (b) the actual patient attendance achieved each year since 1992 and (c) the number of cubicle beds in each unit. [112951]

Ms Stuart: Copies of accident and emergency attendances by NHS trusts are available in the Library. The initial projected number of accident and emergency attendances and the number of beds within accident and emergency units are not collected centrally.

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he was informed of the cancellation of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress and the collapse of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd., and by whom; and if he will make a statement. [112793]

Ms Stuart: The Department was informed of the cancellation of the Global Diversity Congress by the Chief Executive of the Commission for Racial Equality, Susie Parsons, in a letter dated 22 February 2000.

DEFENCE

Employment Statistics

Mrs. Ann Cryer: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many civilians in each of the standard age groups were employed in his Department in (a) 1979 and (b) 1999. [104021]

Dr. Moonie: A breakdown by age group of the number of civilians employed by the Ministry of Defence on 1 April 1999 is given in the table. Corresponding information for 1979 is not readily available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. A breakdown by age group for the whole Civil Service is provided within the annual publication "Civil Service Statistics", available from the Library of the House.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112660]

Dr. Moonie: The annual Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions list public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

Greek Commemorative Medals

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what progress his Department is making in negotiations with the Greek Government on the verification of service to allow the award of Greek commemorative medals to British servicemen and women. [112965]

Dr. Moonie: I presume that the medals referred to are the official campaign medals instituted by the Greek Government for service in Greece and Crete during the Second World War. In recent years the Greek Government have offered them to eligible British ex-Servicemen who have been invited to apply in writing to the Greek Embassy in London. The Queen has granted permission for the medals to be accepted as souvenirs or keepsakes, but not to be worn.

The eligibility criteria, assessment of entitlement and distribution of these medals are entirely matters for the Greek Government. My Department do not directly assist the Greek authorities with the verification of eligibility. However, on request, we will provide any British veteran with an official Record of Service, which he can offer to the Greek authorities and may provide sufficient proof of participation in the campaigns in Greece and Crete, to enable the Greek Government to issue a medal.

TREASURY

Government Investments

Barbara Follett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the Government's investments. [113413]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Today we have confirmed our plans to sell 150 tonnes of gold in 2000–01, a sum equivalent to the amount sold in 1999–2000 on a pro rata basis. These sales form part of the programme announced on 7 May 1999, Official Report, column 479W, to restructure the United Kingdom's reserves holdings. As in 1999–2000, the sales will be made through Bank of England auctions. There will be six auctions during 2000–01, which will be held every other month starting in May. As in 1999–2000, the auctions will be of approximately 25 tonnes each, and they will continue to be conducted on a single price basis.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Regional Orchestras

Ms Atherton: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on plans to reduce the size of regional orchestras. [112812]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Arts Council's plans for the regional orchestras were announced last October. Discussions with individual orchestras on securing their long-term future are currently underway, and these will include looking at ways in which they could benefit from greater flexibility to vary the number of players so that they can diversify their repertoire and bring a greater range of music, including large scale symphonic work, to audiences across England.

Funding Schemes

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the funding schemes administered by his Department, indicating the total funds of each scheme and the administration costs of each scheme as a percentage of the total funds. [112491]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 2 March 2000]: Although my Department provides funding for various schemes they are all administered by other bodies.

Football

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent representations his Department has made to the European Commission regarding the rules allowing professional footballers from any EEA country to play football in any other EEA country. [112514]

Kate Hoey: My Department has made no recent representations to the European Commission on this subject.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112665]

Mr. Chris Smith: The annual Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies, provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1999 edition lists those public bodies in existence at 1 April 1999. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

Since 1 April 1999 my Department has established the following advisory non-departmental public bodies:

Eight Regional Cultural Consortiums covering the following regions:

North West
North East
Yorkshire and Humberside
West Midlands
South West
East Midlands
South East
Eastern.

British Museum

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many British Museum staff have been dismissed over the past 12 months; at what cost; and with what period of notice, in each case. [112380]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The answers are:

Number of staff and their category	Reason for terminations	Period of notice	Total cost (£)
11 aged 60+ who are being compulsorily retired	Museum reorganisation	6 to 9 months	48,529
Nine aged between 50 and 60 who are taking early retirement but on a compulsory basis	Museum reorganisation	6 months	[1]190,470
22 persons under 50 who are taking compulsory early severance	Museum reorganisation	6 months	1,035,510
Three others	Performance or health grounds	2—no notice	0
		1—13 weeks	0

[1] Additionally these staff will be paid an annual compensation cost until they reach age 60. The total cost in the current year is £67,950. Over the next few years this annual sum will reduce as people reach age 60. The overall present value of this payment, at current money values, is estimated to be £455,360. There will also be other one-off costs estimated at £184,390 relating to pension preservation and the bringing forward of lump sums.

Notes:

1. All the compensating amounts shown in the table derive from Civil Service Pension Scheme standard terms and conditions.
2. The table does not include staff whose fixed-term contracts have not been renewed. These terminations do not carry a cost to the Museum.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what the total cost of senior management salaries at the British Museum (a) is for the present year and (b) was for 1997. [112346]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The answers are:

Year	Amount (£)
1 April 1996 to 31 March 1997	181,602
1 April 1997 to 31 March 1998	219,086
1 April 1999 to 31 March 2000	323,560

Notes:

1. We have used as the definition of "senior management" those earning above £59,000 per annum, the threshold we use in pay negotiations following Treasury guidance.
2. Variances between years are due to adjustments to individual salaries and also to changes, since 1 April 1999, to senior management structures in the Museum.
3. These amounts include the salary costs of a senior manager whose appointment is for the life of the Great Court project only.
4. The senior management team has been strengthened for the task of improving the efficiency and effectiveness of the British Museum.

Euro

Mr. Portillo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how much money has been spent to date by his Department and by bodies funded by his Department in connection with the National Changeover Plan; on what headings this money has been spent; and how much his Department plans to spend on implementing the plan over the next 12 months. [112138]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 29 February 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by the Chancellor of the Exchequer on 1 March 2000, Official Report, column 233W.

Jorge Semprun Speech

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will place in the Library an English translation of the speech by Jorge Semprun to the Weimar meeting on EU cultural and audio visual issues. [112386]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave him on 15 June 1999, Official Report, column 88W, and 6 July 1999, Official Report, column 458W. In those answers I outlined the informal discussions of the meeting in Weimar to which Jorge Semprun contributed. The text of his contribution was placed in the Library. Translations of the proceedings of informal Culture/Audiovisual Council meetings are not made: this would be prohibitively expensive.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many designers awarded contracts by the New Millennium Experience Company have received payments from the NMEC that were (a) greater than, (b) the same as and (c) less than the sum specified under the terms of their contract. [110916]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 21 February 2000]: Payments are being made in all cases according to contractual terms. Some invoices are the subject of normal issue resolution procedures.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Diplomatic Immunity

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which consultative committees of the European Communities confer diplomatic immunity on their members; what is the total number of diplomatic passports issued by them; and how many incidents involving such individuals have been covered by diplomatic immunity (a) in the United Kingdom, (b) across the EU and (c) further afield since the establishment of the bodies in each of the last five years. [112332]

Mr. Vaz: Members of consultative committees of the European Union, such as the Committee of the Regions and the Economic and Social Committee have no diplomatic immunity. Therefore, no diplomatic passports have been issued to them and no diplomatic incidents have occurred involving such individuals in the UK, EU or further afield.

Albania

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent assessment he has made of the security situation in Albania. [112108]

Mr. Vaz: The security situation in Albania continues to cause concern. After the civil unrest in 1997 there are still large caches of weapons throughout the country. Although the Government have had some success in recent months in tackling organised crime, armed gangs still operate in the north of the country and in the south on major routes from Greece.

We are helping the Albanian Government to build up the capacity of its police forces and currently have 20 British police officers serving there with the Western European Union's Multi-National Advisory Police Element. We are also providing support, bilaterally and through NATO, for the rebuilding and restructuring of the Albanian armed forces, as well as advice on the disposal of surplus munitions. Up-to-date information on the security situation as it affects travellers in Albania is provided in the FCO's travel advice.

"UK in Europe"

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the planned (a) contents of, (b) contributors to, (c) target audience for, (d) means of distribution of and (e) print run of the booklet, "UK in Europe"; and if schools will receive copies of the booklet. [112371]

Mr. Vaz: The FCO publication, "UK in Europe, a New Millennium", is intended as an introductory text to the subject of Britain's membership of the EU. Written by the FCO, it is targeted at the general public in the UK and overseas. Print runs and the means of distribution have yet to be finalised.

Your Britain, Your Europe Roadshow

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the accommodation costs of the Your Britain, Your Europe Roadshow; and to how many people, from which organisations, these costs were attributable. [112338]

Mr. Vaz: The accommodation costs were £6,775.75. Over the week the costs were attributable to 19 people from two organisations: the FCO and Caribiner, the public relations company which helped organise the roadshow.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what reason his Minister for Europe travelled to Paris, as part of the Your Britain, Your Europe Roadshow, to conduct an interview with a UK radio station; and what was the cost of this visit. [112340]

Mr. Vaz: I visited Paris to deliver a speech at an event to mark the 50th anniversary of the Council of Europe. I took the opportunity also to conduct a radio interview and to meet journalists at the Gare du Nord station to publicise the roadshow. The cost of the visit to Paris was £4,192.69. This covered the travel and accommodation costs of myself and accompanying FCO officials.

Burundi

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the further support announced during his visit to Africa for the Burundi peace process. [112381]

Mr. Hain: The UK has supported the Burundi peace process politically, with resources and with personnel. The UK has contributed over £250,000 so far and will continue to support the process as long as the current momentum is maintained.

I attended the Burundi peace summit at Nelson Mandela's request in Arusha on 21 February, and I announced a further contribution of £30,000 to the current round of negotiations and £50,000 for related reconciliation efforts in Burundi.

Euro

Mr. Portillo: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how much money has been spent to date by his Department and by bodies funded by his Department in connection with the National

Changeover Plan; on what headings this money has been spent; and how much his Department plans to spend on implementing the plan over the next 12 months. [112136]

Mr. Hain [holding answer 29 February 2000]: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office have not incurred any expenditure in connection with the National Changeover Plan, nor do we plan to spend anything over the next 12 months.

Regional and Minority Languages

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress towards the signature of the Council of Europe Charter on Regional and Minority Languages. [113411]

Mr. Robin Cook: I am pleased to announce that yesterday the UK Permanent Representative to the Council of Europe signed the Charter on behalf of the United Kingdom. We hope to ratify later this year, subject to the completion of requisite Parliamentary procedures.

EU Business

Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list (a) the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union for March and (b) the major European Union events for the next six months. [113412]

Mr. Vaz: The following is the information:

Austria

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what change in the UK's bilateral relations with Austria has resulted from the resignation of the Leader of the Freedom Party of Austria; and if he will make a statement. [113015]

Mr. Vaz: Joerg Haider's resignation as Leader of the Freedom Party has not affected the measures introduced by the 14 members of the EU against Austria on 4 February. The issue has not been Haider's leadership of the Freedom Party, but the participation of the Freedom Party in the government of Austria. We will continue to judge the Austrian Government on how it lives up to its commitments in its Declaration.

Iran

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the death sentences imposed on three Iranian Bahá'ís in the city of Mashad on 3 February; and what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Iranian Ambassador about them. [113014]

Mr. Hain: We remain concerned at reports of the death sentences passed on Mr. Najafabadi, Mr. Moghaddam and Mr. Khulusi in Mashad on 3 February. The picture has been somewhat confused by the recent statement by Mr. Sabeqi, spokesman for the Iranian Judiciary, that no such sentences had been passed. The Portuguese Presidency, on behalf of EU partners, presented a demarche to the Iranian authorities expressing our concern and seeking clarification as to the current status of these three gentlemen on 17 February. We took similar bilateral action with the Iranian Ambassador on 21 February.

We regularly raise with the Iranian authorities our serious concern about treatment of the Bahá'ís. Persecution of individuals on religious grounds is totally unacceptable.

Mr. Temple-Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received concerning the claims by the Iranian exile group, the National Council of Resistance, about the turnout for the recent Iranian Majles elections and falsification of results. [113069]

Mr. Hain: I was aware of this attempt by the National Council for the Resistance of Iran (NCRI) to dismiss as a fraud the conduct and outcome of the recent Iranian elections. Their claims are not credible. The political choice made in the elections by the Iranian people is a matter for them, but our view, and that of all impartial observers, is that the election result in Iran has been a substantial vote of confidence in President Khatami's political and economic reforms, and a clear signal of the Iranian people's interest in modernisation.

For us, that is also a vindication of the policy of engagement with Iran pursued by this Government. That policy has attracted some criticism in the past, sometimes from the people who have accepted at face value the propaganda of the NCRI, which is an organisation dominated by the terrorist Mujahedin-e-Khalq (MKO). The MKO are based in Baghdad and are regarded by Saddam Hussein as some of his most trusted allies. They are despised by most Iranians within Iran for their support for Saddam during the Iran/Iraq war in the 1980s. They have been responsible for a series of terrorist attacks in Iran which we have condemned.

In our dealings with the Iranian Government we and our EU partners have regularly expressed our concern over a number of issues, particularly human rights, and we will continue to do so until those legitimate concerns are dealt with to our satisfaction. But in assessing those concerns, and the progress of events in Iran generally, we will pay little attention to the views of the MKO or NCRI, whose own background and methods do not permit them to speak with authority on democracy or human rights.

The outcome of the elections strengthens our optimism for the future of Iran, and for Britain's developing relationship with Iran.

Nigeria

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Nigeria concerning the Christian-Muslim conflicts in the north of the country. [112988]

Mr. Hain: I discussed the situation in Northern Nigeria with Nigerian Foreign Minister Lamido on 14 February.

I was deeply concerned by the situation in Kaduna and condemn the recent violence there and elsewhere. I have appealed to all those concerned for calm and for them to settle their differences without recourse to violence.

Visa Applications

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many visa applications have been submitted to the Deputy High Commission in (a) Delhi, (b) Mumbai and (c) Calcutta during February 2000; and what were the figures for February 1999. [112790]

Mr. Vaz: The deadline for the submission of entry clearance statistics from overseas posts for the month of February is 15 March. I will write to my hon. Friend when the figures requested are available. I am glad that my hon. Friend was able to visit our entry clearance operations in New Delhi and Bombay recently.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent developments there have been in the revision of the St. Helena constitution. [113019]

Mr. Battle: Following the publication of the White Paper "Partnership for Progress and Prosperity" we have asked the St. Helena Legislative Council what changes they would like to see in the Constitution. We have told them that we are prepared to consider specific, detailed and well argued recommendations for the amendment of the 1988 Constitutional Order.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989

Mr. Gareth Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish the report from Mr. J. J. Rowe on the operation in 1999 of the Prevention of Terrorism (Temporary Provisions) Act 1989. [113408]

Mr. Straw: I have today arranged for copies of Mr. Rowe's report to be placed in the Library. Mr. Rowe recommends that the legislation should be renewed. A draft Order is being laid before the House today which continues all those provisions of the Act which are currently in force.

Quantum Project

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the outcome of the Prison Service's Quantum project. [113409]

Mr. Boateng: I announced in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Chorley (Mr. Hoyle), on 14 December 1999, Official Report, columns 139–40W, that Martin Narey, the Director-General of the Prison Service had selected Electronic Data Systems (EDS) as the preferred supplier for the Quantum project and that negotiations would be held with a view to award of contract. I am pleased to say that the preferred supplier negotiations with EDS have concluded successfully. Martin Narey has decided to award a contract to EDS for the provision of Information Technology services for the Prison Service.

Strip-searches

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many times in each (a) women's and (b) men's prison a prisoner has been strip-searched after a visit by an hon. Member since 1 January. [111968]

Mr. Boateng: Prisons are not required to maintain statistics of the number of strip searches carried out, nor records of visits by hon. Members to prisoners. I am, however, aware that a female prisoner at Highpoint prison was strip searched following a visit by her Member of Parliament on 3 February.

As I advised the hon. Member during the debate he raised on Tuesday 29 February, this strip search was purely a random search. All prisons are required to carry out random searches of prisoners on completion of visits; Highpoint prison has a set level of 10 per cent. for such random searches. Category A prisoners will always be strip searched following any visit in open conditions.

Prison Suicides

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what surveys he undertook in 1999 in prisons in England and Wales to check the efficacy of the suicide awareness programmes. [111978]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service has developed a set of auditable key performance baselines for policies and practices in prison establishments, including the suicide awareness strategy. The standards audit unit of the Prison Service visit establishments to conduct these audits.

In 1999, a total of 71 establishments were audited on the suicide awareness baseline. Of these, 13 achieved a rating of good; 27 acceptable; 24 deficient; and seven unacceptable.

The Director-General is personally committed to ensuring that the suicide awareness strategy works, as are the Director of Security, who has policy responsibility for suicide awareness, and the area managers responsible for establishments. All regularly visit establishments. Members of the suicide awareness support unit at Prison Service headquarters also visit establishments to provide support to those operating the strategy.

Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons also inspects prisons on a regular and unannounced basis during which he will look at the operation of the suicide awareness strategy. In addition to any recommendations that may arise from a visit to an individual prison, the Chief Inspector published a thematic review into the suicide awareness strategy in 1999. This contained a number of recommendations as to how the strategy could be improved; these recommendations are currently being acted upon.

Sex Offenders (Treatment)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which prisons in England and Wales run a sex offenders treatment programme; and what was the number of prisoners attending such a programme on 15 February. [112019]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service sex offenders treatment programme consists of four sub-programmes—core for all offenders, extended for those at high risk of re-offending, adapted for those with a low IQ, and a booster programme for all to reinforce the programme's lessons towards release from custody. A rolling programme is also being trialled for low risk offenders, and to provide a facility to enable those who have not done well on parts of the other programmes to revise elements rather than going through the whole programme again.

The programme is run in its various versions at:

Acklington—core/booster/extended
Albany—core/extended/rolling
Birmingham—core
Brixton—core/extended
Channings Wood—core
Dartmoor—core
Feltham—core

With regard to the number of inmates taking part on the sex offender treatment programme on 15 February, I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hull, North (Mr. McNamara) on 16 February 2000, Official Report, columns 538–39W.

Prisons (Foreign Language Materials)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who has the responsibility for the provision of foreign language newspapers or books for non-English speaking prison inmates held in prisons in England and Wales; and if he will make a statement. [111985]

Mr. Boateng: Foreign language materials are provided in prison establishments through the local public library authority, in accordance with 'Guidelines for Prison Libraries (1997)' which details the standards under which prison libraries should operate. Each establishment has a local public authority librarian working to a joint service level agreement.

Governors of prisons in England and Wales will make arrangements to supply at least one newspaper for every ten prisoners, to be purchased out of prison funds They should provide as full a range of newspapers as possible, taking into account the preferences of those prisoners from ethnic minority groups. This is underpinned by the Prison Service race relations policy, which highlights the importance of prisons being aware of the needs of foreign prisoners and the materials that can be obtained to meet their needs. Subject to security considerations, prisoners are also allowed to receive newspapers, periodicals, magazines or books of their choice.

Secure Remands

Mrs. Golding: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many secure remands to local authority accommodation were made since 1 June 1999 in relation to (a) children aged 12 to 14 years, broken down by age, gender and ethnicity, (b) females aged 15 to 16 years, broken down by age and ethnicity and (c) males aged 15 to 16 years declared vulnerable, broken down by age and ethnicity. [112000]

Mr. Boateng: The number of children and young people remanded or committed to local authority secure accommodation is recorded on the last day of each month by local authority secure units and sent to the Home Office. These returns break down the total number by age, gender and the statutory position under which the child or young person has been placed.

Information on ethnicity is not recorded. We have received returns from all units for June to December 1999 and the totals are set out in the table.

Direct secure remand and committals by courts are made under section 23(4) of the Children and Young Persons Act 1969 and section 37 of the Magistrates' Courts Act 1980. The table also includes remands to secure accommodation under section 25 of the Children Act 1989, following application to a court by a local authority.

Deportation

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people are awaiting deportation following rejection of their application for asylum. [111954]

Mrs. Roche: The information is not available. Data are not available on asylum applicants who have voluntarily left the country without the knowledge of the Home Office. Therefore, it is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the number of failed asylum seekers remaining in the country.

Jury Trial

Mr. Marshall-Andrews: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) of 14 December 1999, Official Report, column 139W, on jury trial, if the sum of £66 million annually takes account of the cost of alternative sentences; and if he will provide a breakdown of the cost of £0.5 million for interlocutory appeals including the legal and administrative costs per appeal. [112410]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The estimated resource savings take account of alternative sentences which the magistrates' courts might impose. It has been assumed, for the purpose of assessing the financial implications of appeals, that 25 per cent. of defendants who would have elected Crown Court trial will appeal to the Crown Court against the magistrates' decision to try the case, and that 17.5 per cent. of appeals would proceed to an oral hearing. A paper-based appeal would cost £25 in court resources, £30 in Legal Aid and £35 in prosecution costs. An oral hearing would cost an additional £77 in court resources, £45 in Legal Aid and £60 in prosecution costs.

Metropolitan Police Housing

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department who receives the proceeds of the sale of Metropolitan Police housing. [112409]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Receiver for the Metropolitan Police District informs me that the proceeds of the sale of Metropolitan Police housing go to the Metropolitan Police Fund.

New Prisons

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions his Department has had on possible sites for the construction of new prison establishments in England and Wales; and if he will list the areas in which such establishments may be built. [112618]

Mr. Boateng: The siting of new prisons is governed by strategic need. Prison population pressures are currently greatest in areas such as Greater London, the Midlands, the North-West and Yorkshire, and it is in these locations that the Prison Service has concentrated its efforts on finding new prison sites.

All new prison sites involve discussions with the respective local planning authorities in accordance with Crown development procedures.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the enforcement of European Union legislation in the UK regarding animal experimentation. [112692]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: It is the role of the European Commission to enforce Community legislation in the sense that full transposition into national law is required for a Council Directive.

Directive 86/609/EEC—on the approximation of laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the member states regarding the protection of animals used for experimental and other scientific purposes—is transposed and implemented in the United Kingdom through the rigorous controls of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

The domestic legislation was last amended in July 1998 (for enactment on 5 September 1998) when several requirements of the Directive, which had previously been enacted through administrative provisions, were placed on the face of the 1986 Act.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112669]

Mr. Straw: The annual Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions lists public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango.

Home Detention Curfew

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many of the prisoners released to date under the Home Detention Curfew scheme have (a) breached the conditions of the curfew, (b) disappeared, (c) had their curfew revoked and (d) re-offended while on the scheme; what offences were committed by those who re-offended while on the scheme; what was the (i) average and (ii) maximum sentence received by a prisoner for an offence committed while on the scheme; and if he will make a statement. [112728]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 2 March 2000]: As of 29 February 2000, 862 prisoners subject to home detention curfew have had their licences revoked by the Secretary of State following a breach of the curfew conditions of their licence or a breach of their non-curfew licence conditions. Fifty are currently unlawfully at large. Breaches of non-curfew related conditions by curfewees whose original offences were committed prior to 1 January 1999 are dealt with by the courts. Information on these cases is not held centrally.

The number of cases where a breach of curfew conditions has been reported is not readily available and I will write to the hon. Member with this information.

As of 29 February, the Prison Service had received notification of 194 curfewees who had been charged with an offence committed while subject to the home detention curfew scheme.

A breakdown of the offences committed by these curfewees is shown in the table. This breakdown has been prepared from information supplied by police forces and drawn from the police national computer. Further analysis of re-offending by those subject to home detention curfew, including the procedures for notification of further charges to the Prison Service by the police, is currently under way as part of a long-term evaluation of the scheme.

Information is not held centrally on the sentences received by prisoners for offences committed while subject to home detention curfew.

Overall, the home detention curfew scheme has an impressive success rate of 95 per cent. of curfewees completing their period of curfew licence. However, we are not complacent about any re-offending on curfew and the scheme is strictly enforced. Where a prisoner does commit a further offence while subject to curfew, he or she is in breach of their licence conditions and may be recalled to prison, in addition to the possibility of an additional sentence for the new offence.

[2] Including Drunk and Disorderly
Note:
Where a curfewee was charged with more than one offence, they appear in the table next to the most serious offence. The table excludes those where, following initial notification, the Prison Service was informed that the charges had been withdrawn.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners released on the home detention curfew scheme have been convicted (a) summarily and (b) on indictment of a further offence committed whilst on the scheme; and what (i) original and (ii) further offences were committed and what sentences were received in each case. [112794]

Mr. Boateng: Information is not held centrally on the convictions and sentences received by those who have committed offences while subject to home detention curfew.

Probation Service

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received on his plans to change the name of the Probation Service to the Community Punishment and Rehabilitation Service; how many representations were (a) in favour and (b) against his plans; and if he will make a statement. [112738]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 2 March 2000]: A total of 216 representations have been received relating to the proposed change to the name of the probation service. The great majority of these have been generally supportive of the plans for modernising the service and accept the benefit of having a new name, but most expressed concern about the name "Community Punishment and Rehabilitation Service". The new name will be one of a range of measures in the forthcoming Criminal Justice and Court Services Bill, and I have said that I will listen carefully to the points raised when the Bill is considered by Parliament.

Crime Statistics (London)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his projection for the level of recorded crime from April 1999 to March 2000 for the Metropolitan Police area in relation to (a) burglary of dwellings and (b) robbery against which the five-year crime reduction target has been set. [113023]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis informs me that the current projections for burglary of a dwelling and robbery offences in the financial year 1999–2000 are: (a) burglary of a dwelling, approximately 79,000; and (b) robbery approximately 36,000.

As part of its strategy to reduce crime in London, the Metropolitan Police have targets to reduce domestic burglaries by 10 per cent. and Street Crime by 15 per cent. over the next five financial years, based on the projected recorded crime figures for the end of the financial year 1999–2000.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish statistics for (a) crime rates broken down by categories of offences and (b) clear up rates in (i) the areas transferring out of the Metropolitan force and (ii) London boroughs for each of the last two years. [112761]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Most details of notifiable offences, and clear ups, are not collected centrally below police force area level. Details of the numbers of a limited range of offences recorded in Basic Command Units for the six month period ended September 1999, including London boroughs and those areas being transferred from the Metropolitan police to other forces, are included in the Home Office Statistical Bulletin on recorded crime, issue 1/00, published on 18 January and which is available in the Library.

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will investigate the reasons why the accounts of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. for the last financial year have not been filed at Companies House; and if he will make a statement. [112796]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: These are matters for the liquidator.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Female Genital Mutilation

Ms McCafferty: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what the Government's policy is on measures to eradicate violence against women, with particular reference to the practice of female genital mutilation in developing countries. [111295]

Clare Short: Violence against women is one of the most shocking manifestations of women's inequality. We are working to ensure that women's empowerment and equality are actively pursued in the mainstream of all development activities.

Female genital mutilation is a serious health issue. It is also a violation of the rights of women to live free from violence. Our policy is to try to persuade countries where the practice occurs to take steps to reduce and eventually eliminate it. We encourage Governments to strengthen laws which prohibit female genital mutilation and other harmful traditional practices, such as dowry deaths. We also work with women's organisations to strengthen their capacity to address female genital mutilation and other harmful traditional practices. We have supported NGO projects to train health workers in a number of countries, including Ghana, Egypt, Kenya, Tanzania and Ethiopia, to prevent and manage health complications related to female genital mutilation.

We have also made a major contribution to the Trust Fund on Violence Against Women run by UNIFEM, which provides support to local women's organisations working on issues of violence against women throughout the world. We also work to combat the effects of violence against women through our bilateral programme in more than a dozen poor countries.

Operation Rachel

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the nature of the assistance provided by the European Union to the South African Police Service as part of Operation Rachel. [112348]

Clare Short: The European Union has agreed to provide up to 200,000 euros under the Common Foreign and Security Policy to the South African Police Service as the implementing agency of Operation Rachel for 1999–2000. This is part of the EU Joint Action initiative to combat small arms proliferation. The UK contribution to this will be about 16 per cent. or £20,000. In addition, the Government have provided £6,000 of Satellite Telephone Systems for Operation Rachel, through direct bilateral assistance.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the provision of supplies to St. Helena by the RMS St. Helena. [112922]

Clare Short: The RMS St. Helena resumed normal operations on 3 February following the breakdown experienced on 5 November 1999. The ship delivered 720 tonnes of freight to St. Helena on its first scheduled call to the island on 17 February. Alternative arrangements were made to ensure freight delivery continued while the RMS was out of service.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make a statement on the provision of an airstrip on St. Helena. [112966]

Clare Short: I have agreed that my Department will finance a comparative study of air and sea access costs in order to identify the most cost-efficient permanent solution to the island's international passenger and cargo transportation needs. Terms of Reference for the study are currently being prepared and will be agreed with the St. Helena Government. Consultants are expected to start work in the middle of this year.

Serbia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans the Government have for humanitarian aid for Serbia. [110693]

Clare Short: The UN Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs produce regular reports on the humanitarian situation in Serbia. We continue to monitor these closely. While there has not been a humanitarian crisis this winter in Serbia, there is some hardship. We are providing assistance to vulnerable groups in Serbia through the European Commission Humanitarian Office (ECHO). We have no current plans for bilateral humanitarian assistance to Serbia. We are, however, making untied contributions to the emergency Balkans appeals issued by the international agencies.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Child Pedestrians (Accidents)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many child pedestrians were (a) killed and (b) injured by motor vehicles in the City of Leeds in each year since 1990. [112045]

Mr. Hill: The information requested is shown in the table.

Child pedestrian casualties in accidents involving motor vehicles, City of Leeds: 1990–1998

Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if local planning authorities are required to give areas of outstanding natural beauty an equal level of protection to national parks. [112466]

Ms Beverley Hughes [holding answer 2 March 2000]: The then Countryside Commission presented its advice to Government on the future care of National Parks and Areas of Outstanding Natural Beauty (AONBs) in 1998. This included recommendations on planning policy guidance regarding AONBs. We announced our response on National Parks on 29 September 1999 and we will announce our proposals for a package of measures for AONBs when we have finalised our detailed consideration.

Water Company Pensions

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received in respect of the application of the Local Government Pension Scheme (Amendment etc.) Regulations to staff affected by the termination by water companies of Sewerage Agency arrangements; and what response he will make. [113344]

Ms Armstrong: The Local Government Pension Scheme (Amendment etc.) Regulations 1999 are intended to provide private sector employers, bidding for Local Authority contracts under Best Value, with an option of access to the Local Government Pension Scheme so that transferring employees can retain their membership of that scheme while they are engaged delivering outsourced local authority services. I have so far received some 24 representations about the future pension status of employees in local authorities who work on the delivery of privatised water company services through agency agreements established under the terms of the relevant Water Acts. The scale of these agreements, and the alternative pension arrangements available to those employed under them, are being established with the co-operation of the United Kingdom Steering Committee on local government pensions. In the light of that exercise, I will consider carefully the appropriate next steps.

Ladbroke Grove Rail Accident

Mr. Terry Lewis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the signalling system involved in the Ladbroke Grove rail accident was designed and engineered on the assumption that all trains using the system would be equipped with automatic train protection. [112550]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 3 March 2000]: The Health and Safety Executive has informed me that it was not designed and engineered on this assumption.

Peat Compost

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 13W, on peat compost, if he will list the locations of the gardens of his Department including executive agencies and Government offices for the regions. [113347]

Mr. Hill: The Department does not keep central records of the locations of gardens on our estate. The information requested is however being obtained from each of our property centres and will be forwarded to my hon. Friend later this month.

Environment Agency Charges

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received about the proposed increases in charges by the Environment Agency; and if he will make a statement. [113289]

Mr. Meacher: The Environment Agency received 42 responses to its recent consultation exercise on its charging proposals for 2000–01. The Agency's consultation papers stated that it would forward copies of these responses to the DETR. These have now been received and the Agency's proposals are being considered.

Combined Heat and Power

Mrs. Heal: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to change the rating of plant and machinery in combined heat and power schemes; and if he will make a statement. [113426]

Ms Armstrong: Last year we published draft regulations which determine which items of plant and machinery are assessed for business rates. The regulations reflect the recommendations of the second Wood Committee. In particular, generating plant and machinery belonging to the power industry will benefit from a "tools of the trade" exemption although such items which are in the nature of a building or structure will continue to be rateable.

We have now decided that plant and machinery used to generate electricity (such as turbines and engines) in all Good Quality Combined Heat and Power (CHP) schemes, including those used in wider industry, should benefit from this exemption.

De-rating such plant and machinery in CHP installations will ensure that those items are treated equally across all sectors. It also illustrates our continued support for the increased take up of CHP technology which can bring considerable environmental and economic benefits.

We will introduce the exemption from 1 April 2001 when the CHP Quality Assurance programme for assessing the quality of all types of CHP will be fully operational. The programme will determine the eligibility of CHP schemes for a range of benefits including exemption from the Climate Change Levy. The rating exemption for CHP plant and machinery will require a change in secondary legislation which we will publish in draft later in the year.

Transport Costs

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the recent RAC survey on the relative costs to families of using their car and using public transport; and if he will make a statement. [113118]

Mr. Hill: My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Transport was pleased to have provided the foreword to the RAC Report on Motoring 2000 which offered a useful insight into what motorists think are the relative costs of car and public transport. As the report showed there was considerable uncertainty among motorists about the full cost of their travel by car, and of the real costs of public transport. A more accurate picture of actual costs for households is given in table 1.15 "Household expenditure on transport: UK 1987–1997 in Transport statistics in Great Britain; 1999 Edition". We are currently undertaking research to probe what impact costs, both actual and perceived, have on people's travel decisions.

Road Schemes

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when work will begin on the (a) A2/A282 Dartford Improvement, (b) A2 Bean to Tolgate widening, (c) Tolgate to Cobham widening and (d) M60, junctions 5 to 8 widening. [113104]

Mr. Hill: The A2 Bean to Tolgate Widening, A2 Tolgate to Cobham Widening and A2/A282 Dartford Improvement schemes have yet to complete their statutory procedures. The start of works dates will therefore depend on the satisfactory completion of these procedures.

We currently plan to award the construction contract for the M60 Junction 5 to 8 Widening in 2003–04. The precise timing of the start of work will be a matter for the contractor.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlay the decision not to include (a) the widening of the M25 between junctions 12 and 15, (b) the A1(M) Wetherby to Walshford road scheme, (c) the A46 Newark to Lincoln improvement and (d) the A63 Selby bypass in the list of road schemes planned to start in 2001–02. [113100]

Mr. Hill: Owing to the time needed to complete the necessary contract procedures, construction of the M25 Junctions 12 and 15 Widening scheme could not take place any earlier than 2002–03.

The A1(M) Wetherby to Walshford road scheme is to be constructed as part of a Design, Build, Finance and Operate (DBFO) contract. The amount of work needed to prepare the contract documents and undertake the subsequent procurement process means that the contract cannot be awarded before 2002–03.

The contracts for the A46 Newark to Lincoln Improvement scheme and the A63 Selby Bypass are programmed to be awarded in the financial year 2001–02.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what impact the road schemes announced in the recent local transport settlement will have on the Government's objective of reducing traffic growth; and if he will make a statement. [113098]

Mr. Hill: In order to tackle congestion and pollution, the Government want to see a reduction in road traffic growth, and an absolute reduction in road traffic where its damage is greatest. The schemes will, on their own, have a very small impact on total traffic growth. However, the local bypasses will help relieve communities of inappropriate traffic and all of the schemes form part of wider local strategies to improve choice and provide better alternatives to the car, thereby reducing traffic growth.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the start dates and completion dates of the 37 schemes on the Government's list of targeted trunk road and motorway improvements. [113117]

Mr. Hill: Of the 37 schemes in the Targeted Programme of Improvements, 26 have completed their statutory procedures. I have listed the financial years in which we currently plan to award construction contracts for these schemes.

Because Design and Build contracts will be used, the precise timing of the start of works will be a matter for the contractor. The construction periods will depend on individual contracts.

The start dates for the other 11 schemes will depend on the outcome of the remaining statutory procedures.

We propose to take forward A1(M) Ferrybridge to Hook Moor and A1(M) Wetherby to Walshford under Design, Build, Finance and Operate (DBFO) contracts, which we currently expect to award in 2002–03.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when work will begin on the (a) A249 Iwade-Queenborough Improvement, (b) A1(M) Wetherby to Walshford road scheme, (c) A1(M) Ferrybridge to Hook Moor road scheme, (d) M25, junction 12 to junction 15 widening, (e) A23 Coulsdon relief road scheme and (f) A21 Lamberhurst bypass. [113105]

Mr. Hill: The A249 Iwade-Queenborough went to Public Inquiry last September and the start of works date will depend on the outcome of the statutory procedures.

We propose to take forward A1(M) Wetherby to Walshford and the A1(M) Ferrybridge to Hook Moor schemes under Design, Build, Finance and Operate (DBFO) contracts which we currently expect to award in 2002–03.

We currently plan to award construction contracts for both the A23 Coulsdon Inner Relief Road and A21 Lamberhurst Bypass in 2001–02. The precise timing of the start of works will depend on the Contractor.

The M25 J12–15 Widening scheme is due to start in 2002–03. The precise date will depend on the outcome of the necessary procurement processes.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what factors underlay the decision not to include (a) the M60, junctions 5 to 8 widening and (b) the A1 Ferrybridge to Hook Moor road scheme in the list of road schemes planned to start in 2001–02. [113099]

Mr. Hill: Construction of the M60 Junction 5–8 widening could not be finished in time to avoid affecting the transport arrangements for the 2002 Commonwealth Games in Manchester. It was therefore agreed that the start of construction would be delayed until the Games had finished. Construction will start in 2003–04.

The A1 Ferrybridge to Hook Moor road scheme is to be constructed as part of a Design, Build, Finance and Operate (DBFO) contract. The amount of work needed to prepare the contract documents and undertake the subsequent procurement process means that the contract cannot be awarded before 2002–03.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what consultations his Department carried out before the approval of the trunk road schemes planned to start in 2000–01. [113101]

Mr. Hill: Shortly after being elected the Government undertook a year-long strategic review of the roads programme in fulfilment of our manifesto promise. This review, unlike previous roads reviews, included extensive consultation at regional and national level. Around 14,000 responses were received to the consultation document. The results of the Review were announced on 31 July 1998.

Road Studies

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) when the report of the study of road problems (a) in the Hull area, (b) in South East Manchester, (c) in the Tyneside area, (d) around Hastings, (e) around the London orbital motorway, (f) at Deeside Park Junction and (g) between Southampton and Folkestone is to be published; and if he will make a statement; [113102]

(2) when the reports of the study of road problems on the (a) A3 at Hindhead, (b) South and West Yorkshire motorway box and (c) A1 between Bramham and Boston will be published; and if he will make a statement. [113103]

Mr. Hill: We expect final reports for the studies currently under way to be published as follows:

Areas
Access to Hastings Multi-Modal Study	Summer 2000
A1 Bramham to Barton Study	By Autumn 2000
A3 Hindhead Study	End 2000
London Orbital Multi-Modal Study	Autumn 2001
Deeside Park Junctions Study	Spring 2001
Tyneside Area Multi-Modal Study	Spring 2001
South East Manchester Multi-Modal Study	Spring 2001
South and West Yorkshire Motorway Box	Autumn 2001
Multi-Modal Study	Autumn 2001

Both the Hull Multi-Modal Study and Southampton to Folkestone Multi-Modal Study are in the second tranche of our study programme. Preparatory work on these studies will begin later this year. We anticipate that it will take some 12 to 15 months to complete the Hull study and between 18 and 24 months to complete the Southampton to Folkestone Study.

Trunk Roads

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the (a) trunk roads that are carried by a bridge, or which pass through a tunnel, of at least 600 m in length and (b) the dates on which such bridges and tunnels are set to be renewed. [113114]

Mr. Hill: In England there are 33 bridges and three tunnels with a length greater than 600 m, carrying 21 different trunk roads. This figure excludes trunk roads transferring to the Greater London Authority in July 2000 as these will be de-trunked.

All these structures have long residual lives and there are no plans for their renewal in the foreseeable future. There is an ongoing programme of works to ensure all structures remain safe and serviceable.

The Secretary of State has made it clear that, in the context of the Transport Bill, he does not have any plans to charge on existing structures that are not already tolled.

I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Peter Nutt, to write to the hon. Member with a list and place a copy in the Library.

Letter from Peter Nutt to Mr. Bernard Jenkin, dated 6 March 2000:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Keith Hill, has asked me to write in response to your written PQ about trunk road structures of at least 600m in length.

I attach a list of those structures. Please contact Gerry Hayter in our Structures Section (telephone 0171 921 4789) if you require any further information on this subject.

The table below lists English trunk road bridges over 600m in length[1].

London Elections

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about the location of polling stations for early voting for the GLA and London mayoral elections. [113112]

Mr. Hill: We are providing for one early voting polling station for each London borough with less than 150,000 voters, and for two stations in every other borough. The exact locations of the polling stations is a matter for the boroughs themselves. They will be listed in an Order which I intend to lay before the House shortly.

Rail Safety

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the persons to whom media briefings were given by Government press spokesmen on the subject of rail safety on Monday 21 February, prior to the Deputy Prime Minister's statement on Tuesday 22 February. [113110]

Mr. Hill: None.

Rail Rolling Stock

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate the value of new rail rolling stock that is waiting for safety approval; and if he will make a statement. [113113]

Mr. Hill: The value of rolling stock currently awaiting safety case approval is in the order of £150 million. I expect the industry to re-double their efforts to achieve safety approval and deliver these trains into service at the earliest opportunity.

Mr. Alan Donnelly

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations in relation to specific planning applications in the last 24 months his Department has received from Mr. Alan Donnelly prior to his resignation as a Member of the European Parliament. [113122]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department has on record one representation from Alan Donnelly during this period. This was received in April 1999 and concerned a possible change of land use for the Vaux Brewery site in Sunderland.

Rough Sleepers Unit

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what will be the cost of the Head of the Rough Sleepers Unit and her department in (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01. [113124]

Ms Armstrong: The administration budget for the Rough Sleepers Unit in 1999–2000 is £1.013 million and in 2000–01 £1.297 million. This excludes accommodation and other support costs which are apportioned centrally.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what objectives and targets have been set for the head of the Rough Sleepers Unit. [113123]

Ms Armstrong: The key objective of the Head of the RSU is to deliver the Government's target to reduce rough sleeping to as near zero as possible and by at least two thirds by 2002.

Windows

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make it his policy to require planning permission for a window to be inserted in an existing house wall which faces a window in a separate house and is less than 20 metres away; and if he will make a statement. [113183]

Mr. Raynsford: The Town and Country Planning (General Permitted Development) Order 1995 grants a general planning permission for a range of minor works of development to dwellinghouses, including the insertion of windows. In granting permitted development rights, we have to strike a balance between giving freedoms to individual householders to improve their homes, and protecting the amenity of neighbouring properties. We are not aware of any significant problems in the exercise of permitted development rights relating to windows and therefore have no plans to change these at the present time. We will, however, continue to monitor any representations received on this issue.

Renewable Energy

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to promote a strategic approach to planning for renewable energy development; and if he will make a statement. [113479]

Mr. Raynsford: A positive, strategic approach to planning for renewable energy is essential to help to deliver the Government's targets and goals for renewable energy and climate change, which are central to achieving sustainable development, while continuing to protect the landscape. This was underlined in "New and Renewable Energy: Prospects for the 21st Century: Conclusions in Response to the Public Consultation", published by my right hon. Friend, the Minister for Energy and Competitiveness in Europe, on 1 February 2000.

In order to promote this strategic approach from the regional level downwards, the Government Offices for the Regions are initiating work to prepare regional assessments and targets for renewable energy provision based upon—and, where necessary, updating—existing resource studies. On 9 February 2000, DETR published "Guidance on Preparing Regional Sustainable Development Frameworks". The guidance indicated that the Government hope that the frameworks will draw upon this work and elaborate a regional approach to renewable energy, including regional targets which flow from the assessments of each region's capacity to generate electricity from a range of different sources. The Government would like to see frameworks in place in all regions by the end of 2000.

The frameworks will work alongside Regional Planning Guidance (RPG) and Regional Development Agencies' Economic Strategies in promoting sustainable development. Thus we envisage RPG taking forward in land-use terms a region's strategy for delivering renewable energy targets by defining broad locations for renewable energy development and setting criteria to help local authorities select suitable sites in their plans. We would encourage regional planning bodies to set targets in RPG, where sensible to do so, for the structure plan and unitary development plan areas within the region consistent with the regional targets provided by the regional sustainable development frameworks. Advice on this will be set out in the final version of the revised "Planning Policy Guidance (PPG) note 11: Regional Planning". This will be published shortly.

Together with the national planning policy guidance in "PPG 22: Renewable Energy", RPG—as taken forward through structure plans and Part I unitary development plans—will provide a strategic framework for policies and proposals for renewable energy development in local plans, including the identification in those plans of suitable sites. This, in turn, will feed through to decisions on individual planning applications.

More positive planning at regional and local levels will contribute to greater public familiarity with, and acceptance of, prospective renewable energy developments. It remains important, however, for operators to prepare the ground with local authorities, environmental organisations and local people before formal planning applications are submitted and to develop proposals in consultation with them.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

M25 Murder

Mr. Radice: To ask the Solicitor-General if, following the recent decision by the European Court of Human Rights in relation to the M25 murder case, he will take steps to expedite the appeal procedure for similar cases. [112628]

The Solicitor-General: This case was referred to the Court of Appeal by the Criminal Cases Review Commission. It will be for the Court of Appeal to decide whether in due course the convictions are to be quashed. I have no power to expedite such hearings, nor am I aware of any other similar cases awaiting a hearing in the domestic courts.

Serious Fraud Office

Mr. Nicholls: To ask the Solicitor-General what criteria the Director of the Serious Fraud Office is required to follow in exercising his discretion not to institute criminal proceedings in return for the person concerned giving evidence for the prosecution; what administrative procedures must be carried out before the exercise of his discretion, in particular if he is required to carry out inquiries into the antecedents of such a person; how many times the Director has exercised his discretion since 1995; if the prohibition against convicted criminals being able financially to benefit by their crimes extends to such a person; and if he will make a statement. [112407]

The Solicitor-General: In deciding whether to prosecute, the Director of the Serious Fraud Office applies the evidential and public interest tests set out in the Code for Crown Prosecutors. Because fraud cases present particular problems of complexity it is sometimes necessary for investigators to have the assistance of one of the participants in a fraud in order to break it. Usually such a participant is on the periphery of the wrongdoing. In such cases the Director will consider all the information available at the time (including any information as to the financial or other benefits received as a result of the participation in the fraud) and may consult the Law Officers for advice. The Director will always consult the Law Officers before granting a formal written immunity from prosecution. [If the offence does not relate to serious or complex fraud the Director will seek the assistance of the Director of Public Prosecutions.] The number of times the Director has exercised his or her discretion since 1995 cannot be ascertained without incurring disproportionate cost.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what consultations he has had with ministerial colleagues in the Department of Social Security regarding the administrative costs of stakeholder pensions to small businesses with more than five employees. [111807]

Ms Hewitt: Officials from the DTI were involved in the consultation on stakeholder pensions and continue to be involved in the communications working group. In addition, a consultative panel which included employer representatives, was formed to discuss all issues relating to the scheme, including compliance costs. Concerns over burdens on business contributed to the decision to introduce an exemption for small businesses with less than five employees. However, we are aware that there will be administrative responsibilities for those businesses with five employees or more, and officials from the newly formed Small Business Service (SBS) are in discussion with their DSS counterparts to consider what can be done to minimise the requirements of the administrative process.

Ilisu Dam

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment the Government have made of Balfour Beatty's suitability as an applicant for ECGD support in relation to the Ilisu Dam Project. [112416]

Mr. Caborn: Balfour Beatty's application for support in respect of Ilisu is being considered by ECGD. ECGD is satisfied that they have the financial and technical competence to carry out their role in the Ilisu project, and have no reason to regard them as ineligible for ECGD support.

Mr. Savidge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what account will be taken of past and present disputes between Turkey and neighbouring states over water resources in making the decision about ECGD support for the Ilisu Dam. [112787]

Mr. Caborn: As my hon. Friend will know, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has raised the issue of downstream flow as one of the four areas of concern we have about the Ilisu project. We are continuing to monitor developments on all four issues.

Lesotho Highlands Project

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of Balfour Beatty's membership of the Lesotho Highlands Project Contractors' consortium. [112415]

Mr. Caborn: Allegations of corruption have been made against the Lesotho Highlands Project Contractors' consortium, of which Balfour Beatty was a member, and are the subject of court proceedings in South Africa. Balfour Beatty have said that there is no truth in the allegations.

It will be for the Courts to decide, and their verdict is expected later this year. Meanwhile, the members of the consortium must enjoy the presumption of innocence.

British Nuclear Fuels

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received a copy of the report prepared by British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. for Lloyd's Register Quality Assurance Ltd.; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library. [112567]

Mrs. Liddell: I have not received a copy of the report. This is a matter between BNFL and Lloyd's Register Quality Assurance.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry If he will make a statement in respect of the supply of MOX fuel by BNFL to Germany. [112032]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 1 March 2000]: I understand that BNFL has reviewed all the records for quality assurance checks carried out on MOX fuel supplied to its German customer, Preussen Electra. In the case of the record for one of the pellet lots concerned, BNFL found that in 1996 a set of data collected from a secondary manual sample check of pellet diameter measurements, which had already been confirmed as acceptable, was inadvertently deleted from a computer. The lost data were replaced with data collected from the same check carried out on a previous pellet lot. BNFL considers that all other secondary pellet diameter checks for MOX produced for its German customer have been properly carried out and recorded. The MOX supplied by BNFL has been operating satisfactorily in the reactor in Germany since 1997. The HSE states in its report that it is satisfied that the fuel manufactured in the MOX Demonstration Facility will be safe in use. This view is based on the robustness of the fuel manufacturing process and the totality of the checks made on the key parameters. However, BNFL's customer has decided to shut the unit down and replace the fuel assemblies concerned.

Miners (Compensation)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total of payments made to date to NACODS South Wales area as reimbursement of costs incurred in the compensation claims for (a) chest disease and (b) vibration white finger. [112481]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government make no payments direct to NACODS South Wales area.

Under the arrangements agreed between the DTI and the Claimants' Solicitor's Groups for chest diseases and vibration white finger, the Government pay any costs or reasonable disbursements falling due direct to the solicitors. Any arrangement whereby Unions recover sums from the solicitors is strictly a matter for the parties concerned.

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his estimate of the compensation that will be paid out over the next three years to miners and miners' widows in respect of (a) chronic bronchitis and emphysema and (b) vibration white finger in (i) Scotland and (ii) the UK. [112961]

Mrs. Liddell: Over the next three years we currently estimate that compensation will be paid as follows:

(a) chronic bronchitis and emphysema

(i) £53 million in Scotland

(ii) £699 million in the UK (including Scotland)

(b) Vibration white finger

(i) £47 million in Scotland

(ii) £760 million in the UK (including Scotland).

These estimates are subject to considerable change. Firmer figures will become available only once significant numbers of claimants for both diseases have been through the full assessment procedures.

Balkans (Regeneration)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he has taken to publicise the opportunities for British firms to take part in the regeneration of (a) Kosovo and (b) other Balkan states. [112960]

Mr. Caborn: On the initiative of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, British Trade International set up the joint Government/private sector Kosovo Taskforce to co-ordinate and promote the UK's response to the reconstruction opportunities in the province. The Taskforce has done much to publicise the opportunities for British companies to play a part in the regeneration of Kosovo. Indeed, arising out of the Taskforce's activities, a consortium of British companies, with financial support from British Trade International, was awarded the concession to manage Kosovo's power sector over the seven months from last October; this is helping ensure that the people of Kosovo get through the harsh winter. Through help from the Taskforce, another British consortium was awarded the contract for the first phase of the upgrading of Pristina airport.

During my visit to Kosovo last October, it was clear that the good will arising out of both contracts should help UK companies compete for other business, not only in these two sectors but also in other areas of activity. This will be particularly important as Kosovo moves into the next phase of recovery, with strategic infrastructure projects, designed to help secure its longer term future, being put out to competitive tender by the international agencies. I am confident that I will see UK companies making even more progress when I again visit Kosovo in June. British Trade International has posted an official to the British Office in Pristina on a short-term basis to draw the attention of appropriate companies to opportunities in Kosovo and to assist those seeking to capitalise on them; resources have been secured for the next financial year to fund this post for the longer term.

To keep the business community abreast of commercial developments in Kosovo, British Trade International has set up a website: its address is www.brittrade.com/kosovo/. This includes information on the activities of the Taskforce and the international funding agencies—including information on projects they are funding. Kosovo has been an early and demanding test of British Trade International; it has been widely praised by the private sector for all its initiatives there.

Many companies regard Kosovo as the springboard for entry to the wider South East Europe region (the Balkans) which presents significantly more business opportunities; these are highlighted on the Kosovo website. Through promotional events such as seminars, support for trade fairs and missions, British Trade International continues to draw the attention of UK companies to commercial opportunities generally in all the markets of the region.

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate he has made of the number of working women in England and Wales who have benefited from the introduction of the national minimum wage. [112916]

Mr. Alan Johnson: It is estimated that some 1.5 million workers in England and Wales became entitled to higher pay as a direct result of the introduction of the national minimum wage in April 1999. The Low Pay Commission report estimates that around two-thirds of the beneficiaries are women.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the unrecovered loans issued by the Export Credits Guarantee Department (a) between 1979 and April 1997 and (b) since May 1997 which are attributable to defence related contracts, including details of (i) equipment, (ii) country and (iii) financial amount. [112959]

Mr. Caborn: The information readily available is as follows:

(a) the value of claims paid by ECGD in respect of defence-related contracts under guarantees issued between the mid 1980's and April 1997 and which remain outstanding for recovery as at 29 February 2000 is as follows:

£ million

Country	Value of claims outstanding
Algeria	98
Egypt	46
Indonesia	169
Kenya	16

The equipment supplied under these contracts includes aircraft, artillery, naval vessels, vehicles, communications and ancillary equipment.

(b) there have been no claims paid by ECGD in respect of defence related contracts under guarantees issued since May 1997.

Post Offices (Easington)

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the number and location of crown and sub-post offices in the Easington constituency and the amount of Benefit Agency work carried out by each post office as a percentage of its business. [112805]

Mr. Alan Johnson: I understand from the Post Office that in October 1999 there were 23 post offices, all sub-post offices, within the Easington parliamentary constituency. Of these, 19 derive 40 per cent. or more of their work load from the Benefits Agency. It is not Post Office policy to identify individual offices by the volumes and nature of business transacted.

EU Structural Funds

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what progress he has made in meeting the requirements of the European Commission for the securing of public sector funding for the Objective 1 programme for Merseyside. [112940]

Mr. Caborn: It is for the Merseyside partnership to satisfy the European Commission's requirements for approval of the Single Programming Document for the Merseyside Objective 1 programme. However, my Department, other Government Departments and the Government Office for the North West are assisting the Merseyside partnership in negotiations with the Commission and in other ways, notably identifying match funding.

Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps she is taking to co-ordinate Government activities relating to the Objective 1 programme for Merseyside and those of other Objective 1 areas. [112941]

Mr. Caborn: Responsibility for the Merseyside Objective 1 rests primarily with the Merseyside partnership. The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions leads for the Government on regional policy in England. My Department is in contact with the three English Objective 1 areas and is assisting in negotiations with the European Commission as well as co-ordinating the response of all the Government Departments concerned with central government match funding for the English Objective 1 programmes.

Flower Imports

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the value of flowers imported into the UK from non-EU sources in each year since 1990. [113028]

Mr. Caborn: The information is given in the table.

UK Imports of bulbs, tubers, etc; and cut flowers from non-EU countries

21st Century Faxes Ltd.

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will implement measures to deal with the activities of 21st Century Faxes Ltd. [113038]

Ms Hewitt: It is not the practice of my Department to discuss the affairs of individual companies. If the hon. Member has information he considers should be drawn to my attention, I would be happy to receive this.

International Price Comparisons

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 50W, on international price comparisons, which national Sunday newspapers were not represented at the briefing session on 11 February. [113021]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 3 March 2000]: Representatives of all the national Sunday newspapers were invited to attend. Our records show that representatives of the Sunday Mirror and the Sunday People did not attend.

Telephone Service Disruption

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what inquiries (a) he and (b) Oftel have started into the major faults in computers which disrupted 0845 telephone number access, NHS Direct Services and other services in the week beginning 21 February; and what action is to be taken to ensure that the telecommunications infrastructure is not disrupted again. [113178]

Ms Hewitt: The regulation of telecommunications operators is the responsibility of Oftel. Oftel has asked BT for a full report of this network failure and for details of the measures BT will put in place to minimise the risk of this kind of failure happening again. Oftel takes network reliability very seriously and it will scrutinise carefully BT's report. When BT has completed its investigations Oftel will discuss the incident with BT and examine whether any further action will be required to ensure that the risks of further disruption are minimised.

SCOTLAND

Departmental Employees

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the total work force in his Department is registered as disabled; and what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of disabled people in his Department. [102041]

Dr. Reid: At 1 January 2000 no staff from the Scotland Office had self declared a disability in terms of the Disability Discrimination Act 1995. (The procedure under which people could formerly be registered disabled ceased on 2 December 1999).

Recruitment advertisements and associated information will make it clear that my Department is an equal opportunity employer and will carry the Employment Services Disability symbol, highlighting its commitment to people with disabilities and a positive approach to staff who have a disability.

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what percentage of the total work force in his Department is of ethnic minority origin; and what steps he is taking to encourage the employment of people from the ethnic minorities in his Department. [102729]

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many senior civil servants from an ethnic minority background are employed in his Department; and how many of them are (a) men and (b) women. [110677]

Dr. Reid: Information on the ethnic origin of civil servants is collected using a voluntary, confidential questionnaire. To protect the privacy of individual staff, data relating to fewer than five people are not disclosed in equal opportunities monitoring. Information is therefore not available for my Department for the total percentage of the work force who are from an ethnic minority background.

Action is being taken across the civil service to address the under-representation of ethnic minorities. As part of that, my Department will seek ways to encourage more applications from ethnic minority communities.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Employment Figures

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have left the New Deal for young people for jobs lasting less than 13 weeks but have been included in the number leaving for sustained employment as a result of not having returned to jobseeker's allowance. [105699]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 18 January 2000]: We define sustained jobs as those where the employee is working for at least 13 weeks and does not return to claim jobseeker's allowance (JSA) in that time. If they do return to JSA we drop them from the sustained jobs figure. Using this definition, under the New Deal for young people, 126,190 have found sustained employment. We are not at present able to measure how many, if any, will have left these jobs within 13 weeks and chosen not to claim JSA.

Benefits (Somerset)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many people have had their benefits stopped for failing properly to take up a New Deal option, at each benefit office within the Yeovil constituency and at the Taunton office; and if he will make a statement. [110797]

Ms Jowell: Between 1 April 1999 and 30 September 1999 (the latest date for which data are available), 540 young people started on New Deal and at any one time there were just over 700 young people participating in New Deal in the Employment Service's Somerset Unit of Delivery. During this six month period, eight sanctions were imposed for failing to attend a New Deal option in Somerset. This figure cannot be disaggregated to constituency level. The Somerset Unit of Delivery includes the jobcentres in Taunton, Yeovil, Bridgwater, Burnham-on-Sea, Chard, Frome, Minehead, Street, Wellington and Wells.

Education Maintenance Allowances

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many education maintenance allowances have been awarded in each region to date. [111664]

Mr. Wicks: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Milton Keynes, South-West (Dr. Starkey) on 2 March 2000, Official Report, columns 393–94W.

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the 12 pilot schemes for education maintenance allowances. [113121]

Mr. Wicks: We are encouraged by the success so far in the overall take up of EMAs, which are being piloted in 15 local education authority areas. EMAs have the potential to make a real difference to the life chances of young people and are an innovative way of helping those with financial difficulties to stay in education.

It is too early to identify the impact which EMAs will have on participation rates, although they have increased in all the pilot areas. Anecdotal information suggests that EMAs are helping young people from disadvantaged backgrounds remain in education, when otherwise they may not have participated. A number of institutions have also reported that EMAs have had a positive effect on attendance, effort and discipline. Students recognise that if they want to have the allowance, they have a responsibility to attend regularly and adhere to their learning agreement.

There is a sophisticated evaluation programme in place for the duration of the pilot which will provide more information in due course.

Disabled People

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to expand the clubhouse movement as a way of assisting people with disabilities on the New Deal. [111413]

Ms Hodge: The Government fully support the aim of the Clubhouse movement which engages members and staff together in order to get people with mental health problems back into open paid employment. We are currently considering how the New Deal for Disabled People can best develop and will consider as part of that what role the Clubhouse movement could play.

Secondary School Places

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many secondary age pupils are without a school place in each year group in each London borough; what assistance his Department provides to find places for these children; and if he will make a statement. [111984]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not collected centrally by my Department. Section 14 of the Education Act 1996 places a duty on individual LEAs to ensure that there are sufficient school places for all children of compulsory school age in their area. Each LEA must produce annually a School Organisation Plan, which is a 5 year rolling plan, setting out how they propose to remedy any excess or insufficiency of school places and to make provision for children with special educational needs. Plans are approved at local level by the School Organisation Committee for the area or, if they cannot agree, by an independent Adjudicator. All but two London boroughs have had the Plans they published in 1999 approved by their local School Organisation Committee.

New Deal

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what research his Department has (a) completed and (b) is undertaking on the social, economic and fiscal costs and benefits of the New Deal. [111170]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 22 February 2000]: The Department for Education and Employment and the Employment Service have a comprehensive programme of research and evaluation underway to measure the impact of all aspects of New Deal. All the evaluation studies are carried out by independent external research organisations and all are published.

The research and evaluation programme comprises quantitative and qualitative research with individual participants, quantitative and qualitative research with employers, case studies of delivery and impact, and macro-economic evaluation and analysis.

As part of this programme the Employment Service has commissioned independent analysis of the economic and fiscal costs and benefits of the New Deal for Young People. First results are reported in "The New Deal for Young People: First Year Analysis of Implications for the Macroeconomy", which was published in December 1999 and is available in the library (reference ESR 33). Analysis will continue and will be published in future annual summary reports of the macroeconomic evaluation of the New Deal for young people.

Information on the wider social effects of New Deal is being collected in various New Deal evaluation surveys and will be analysed in published final reports.

The following elements of the NDYP evaluation have been completed and published:

- Case studies of New Deal delivery and impact in Pathfinder areas
- National case studies of delivery and impact
- Qualitative research with individuals on Gateway in Pathfinders
- Qualitative research with individuals on Options in Pathfinders
- Qualitative research with individuals on Follow-Through in Pathfinders
- Qualitative research with individuals on national Gateway
- Qualitative research with individuals on national Options
- Early qualitative research with employers
- Stage 2 qualitative research with employers
- First annual summary report on progress on New Deal to November 1998
- Quantitative survey of leavers from New Deal Gateway to unknown destinations
- New Deal Gateway: A Labour Market Assessment.

The following strands of the evaluation are still underway:

- Qualitative research with individuals on national Follow-Through
- Second annual summary report
- Quantitative survey of individual participants—Stage 1
- Quantitative survey of individuals participants—Stage 2 follow-up survey (interviews underway)
- Quantitative survey of participating employers
- Evaluation of New Deal for Musicians
- Survey of leavers from Options to unknown destinations
- Evaluation of Intensive Gateway Trailblazers.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will state the number and percentage of participants in the New Deal for 18 to 24-year-olds in (a) Great Britain, (b) Scotland and (c) Wales who have entered unsubsidised sustained employment through the New Deal; and if he will list the areas in Scotland where a smaller percentage of participants than the (i) Great Britain average and (ii) the Scottish average figures have entered unsubsidised sustained employment through the New Deal; and if he will list the number and percentage of those entering unsubsidised sustained employment in each of those areas of Scotland. [111280]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 22 February 2000]: The information requested is set out in the tables. Many other young people will have found work without telling the Employment Service.

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) males aged under 25 years, (b) females aged under 25 years, (c) males aged over 25 and, (d) females aged over 25, in (i) Inverclyde, (ii) Renfrewshire and (iii) Scotland as a whole have participated in the New Deal; of these how many entered full-time employment afterwards; and if he will make a statement. [111501]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 28 February 2000]: The figures shown in the table relate to the period ending December 1999.

Access Funds and Hardship Loans

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Wirral, South (Mr. Chapman) of 25 January 2000, Official Report, column 151W, if he will tabulate the annual cost component element of his package for access funds and hardship loans. [112124]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 28 February 2000]: Of the £68 million which the package will cost in a full year, £10 million is identified for bursaries for disadvantaged young students, administered through Access Funds. The package did not contain any cost component for Hardship Loans. Furthermore, in 2000–01 we are making available £17 million for bursaries for mature students and £57 million for a Hardship Fund.

Further Education

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the (a) adequacy and (b) sufficiency of further education funding in the East Midlands. [112116]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 28 February 2000]: Analysis undertaken by the FEFC as part of its monitoring of potential risks to adequacy and sufficiency of provision indicates that there are seven, out of a total of 33 colleges funded by the FEFC within the East Midlands, assessed as category C. That classification implies that a college is financially weak or may become dependent on the goodwill of others. The Council has instigated strategies in regard to these institutions. Where there is any risk to adequacy and sufficiency the Council will be taking a proactive role in working with those colleges needing support.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the change in the number of full-time equivalent students in further education sector colleges funded by the Further Education Funding Council since 1997. [112360]

Mr. Wicks: The Further Education Funding Council estimate that full-time equivalent student numbers were 1 per cent. lower in 1998–99 than in 1997–98, reflecting the clampdown on the unacceptable aspects of franchising which grew up under the previous Administration. The FEFC will be consulting on measures to support recruitment in line with our plans, which provide for an increase of 700,000 students in FE by 2001–02.

Jean Monnet Projects

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what arrangements are in place to monitor the political neutrality of Jean Monnet projects. [112337]

Ms Jowell: The Jean Monnet project awards funds to support European courses in the Higher Education Sector. The project is run by the European Commission in consultation with university authorities. Member States authorities have no involvement in the programme, which is administered by the Commission's Directorate-General Education and Culture.

Free School Meals

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many children are receiving free school meals in the Greater London area. [112619]

Ms Estelle Morris: In January 1999, the latest date for which information is available, there were 225,566 pupils taking a free school meal in maintained schools in the Greater London area. This figure represents 22 per cent. of day pupils educated in these schools.

Information on free school meals is published annually in the Statistical Volume 'Statistics of Education Schools in England', copies of which are available from the Library.

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the 50 local education authorities with the highest percentage of pupils that are entitled to free school meals ranked in descending order of percentage. [113200]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information requested is shown in the table.

Summer Camps

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress he has made in establishing summer activity camps; when and where the first ones will be held; how many young people will be taking part; what is the expected cost; and if he will make a statement. [112641]

Jacqui Smith: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Daventry (Mr. Boswell) on 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 389.

Community Action Programme

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on planned use of the Community Action Programme to combat discrimination 2000–2006 in (a) the armed forces, (b) schools, (c) the police force, (d) the NHS and (e) the social security system; what media campaigns are planned; and what the target audience is for planned publications. [112508]

Ms Jowell: The Community Action Programme to combat discrimination has been put forward by the European Commission as part of the package of proposals under Article 13 of the EC Treaty. The proposals are currently in negotiation in the Working Group of the Social Affairs Council.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many secondary school teachers in the subjects of (a) mathematics, (b) science, (c) languages and (d) technology left the teaching profession in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and how many secondary school teachers entered the profession in the same period. [112982]

Ms Estelle Morris: Figures showing the number of secondary school teachers in the subjects of (a) mathematics, (b) science, (c) languages and (d) technology leaving the teaching profession in each of the last 10 years are not held centrally.

The numbers[1] of those entering maintained secondary schools who were teaching for the first time, are as follows:

Sixth Form Colleges

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to ensure sixth form colleges get the same level of financial support as secondary schools implementing the new A level curriculum. [112823]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 3 March 2000]: We have taken steps to ensure that both colleges in the FE sector and schools with sixth forms have the resources they need to introduce the revised post-16 qualifications from September this year. At the Government's request, the Further Education Funding Council has revised its funding system so as to offer colleges a clear incentive to provide students with broader programmes of study than the traditional norm. In addition, £35 million was added to the overall education standard spending settlement for 2000–01 to reflect the potential costs to local education authorities nationally of implementing the reforms in the schools they maintain.

School Exclusions

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the 50 local education authorities with the highest number of exclusions expressed as a percentage of their school population for the last year for which figures are available. [113277]

Ms Estelle Morris: The information is shown in the table.

Information on permanent exclusions for the academic year 1998–99 is currently being collected and national estimates are expected to be published in a Statistical First Release in May.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the total of accumulated TEC surpluses to date. [113212]

Mr. Wicks: Based on the 1998–99 consolidated annual statutory audited accounts of 72 English TECs, the total of accumulated TEC post-tax surpluses/deficits was a deficit £12.7 million.

Correspondence

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when the hon. Member for Walsall, North will receive a reply to his letter of 31 January concerning political material in schools. [113310]

Jacqui Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply issued today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Education and Employment.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Rat Infestation

Ms Walley: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what was the total expenditure in each of the last three years for treating and controlling rat infestations in the Palace of Westminster. [113068]

Sir Sydney Chapman: The Palace of Westminster does not have a significant problem of infestation by rats, and most of the vermin supposedly identified as rats have, in fact, turned out to be mice. However, the total expenditure on pest control for the Palace of Westminster for the last three years has been as follows:

1997–98	15,185
1998–99	16,405

NORTHERN IRELAND

Local Authority Loans

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will propose an amendment of the law to allow local authorities in Northern Ireland to redeem outstanding long term loans; and if he will make a statement. [112655]

Mr. Ingram: Redemption terms were published in the Belfast Gazette on 13 January 1995.

HMP Maghaberry

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on what date instructions were last issued at HMP Maghaberry, governing the receipt by prisoners of printed materials dealing with political subjects; and if he will place a copy in the Library. [111942]

Mr. Ingram [holding answer 2 March 2000]: There are no specific instructions in existence regarding the receipt by prisoners of printed materials dealing with political subjects at Maghaberry Prison. The admission of all printed material to HMP Maghaberry is governed by Rule 67 of the Prison and Young Offenders Centre Rules (Northern Ireland) 1995. HMP Maghaberry is a fully integrated prison with no segregation on grounds of political, religious or paramilitary affiliation. As a result, the Governor may use his discretion, under Prison Rule 67, to refuse admission to printed material dealing with political subjects if he believes it could prejudice the security, or control, of the prison by raising tensions between such affiliates.

Good Friday Agreement

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he is taking to restore dialogue between the parties to the Good Friday Agreement. [113360]

Mr. Mandelson: Following my decision on 11 February to suspend the operation of the institutions, I have had several meetings with the political parties in Northern Ireland and with the Irish Government. I will have a further series of meetings during the course of this week to determine how the necessary cross community confidence can be rebuilt to enable the institutions to be restored as soon as possible.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Donaldson: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will recommend a minimum level of infertility treatments per 100,000 of population in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement. [113189]

Mr. George Howarth: I have no plans to recommend a minimum level of treatment for infertility. In line with Health Authorities in Great Britain, it is a matter for the Health and Social Services Boards in Northern Ireland to determine the priority to be given to infertility services in their areas. Such decisions are taken in the light of local needs, available resources and clinical effectiveness.

Central Services Agencies Register

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people there are on the Central Services Agencies Register. [112798]

Mr. George Howarth: The number of General Medical Practitioners on the Central Services Agency's Register was 1,061 at 1 February 2000, the latest date for which figures are available.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112672]

Jane Kennedy: The annual Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies", provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions list public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

National Lottery

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the statement that rural areas received a higher share of National Lottery awards than urban areas on page six of the report by the Cabinet Office, entitled "Sharing the Nation's Prosperity," refers to (a) the share of the number of individual lottery awards or (b) the monetary value of the awards. [110507]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 17 February 2000]: The statement that rural areas received a higher share of National Lottery awards than urban areas is based on the number of awards per capita.

Communications Industry

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to create a single regulator for the communications industry. [112616]

Janet Anderson: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry announced on 3 February their intention to publish a White Paper later this year setting out the Government's proposals for the reform of communications legislation. It is to early to say at this stage what the White Paper will propose concerning the regulatory structures for the communications industry.

Parthenon Marbles

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his policy on the return of the Parthenon Marbles to Greece. [113163]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The Government believe that the Parthenon sculptures should remain at the British Museum.

Concessionary Television Licences

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list by constituency the number of pensioner households which (a) will and (b) will not be eligible for the free television licence in November. [113018]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 3 March 2000]: This information is not available. 1991 Census information is out of date and no household survey has a sample size sufficient to make reliable estimates of qualifying households at a constituency or local authority level.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many pensioner households will not receive the free TV licence for the over 75s. [111865]

Janet Anderson: The estimated number of households consisting only of people of state pensionable age but below the age of 75 is 2.9 million.

DEFENCE

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many questions to his Department tabled for ordinary written answer during Session 1998–99 were answered (a) within two weeks of tabling, (b) within one month of tabling, (c) within three months of tabling and (d) after three months of tabling. [106491]

Dr. Moonie: During the Session 1998–99, 1,347 questions were tabled to my Department for ordinary written answer. Of this total, 1,240 were answered within two weeks of tabling, 1,284 were answered within one month of tabling and 1,304 were answered within three months of tabling. All 1,347 questions were answered after three months of tabling.

Anglo-French Submarine Patrol

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions involving Ministers and officials of his Department have recently taken place or are planned within the Anglo-French Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy and Doctrine concerning joint or co-ordinated ballistic missile submarine patrols with the French Navy. [112423]

Mr. Hoon: None. The UK/France Joint Nuclear Commission, established in 1992, normally meets twice yearly at official level for discussions on a wide range of issues. By joint agreement, these exclude the operational deployment of our respective nuclear deterrent forces.

Euro

Mr. Portillo: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent to date by his Department and by bodies funded by his Department in connection with the National Changeover Plan; on what headings this money has been spent; and how much his Department plans to spend on implementing the plan over the next 12 months. [112146]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 29 February 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer given on 29 February 2000, Official Report, column 233W, by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary.

River Class Minesweepers

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason the Ministry of Defence Performance report 1998–99 published on 20 December 1999 includes River Class minesweepers transferred to Brazil in 1998; and if he will make a statement. [112431]

Mr. Hoon: The Ministry of Defence Departmental Performance Report 1998–99 covers the period 1 April 1998 to 31 March 1999. The River Class Patrol Minesweepers—Blackwater, Itchen, Spey and Arun—were reported in two sections of the Report: Paragraph 41 and Annexe B. Paragraph 41 noted their hand-over to the Brazilian Navy, which occurred between the end of April 1998 and mid October 1998. Annexe B, the Royal Navy Force Structure table, detailed all Fleet Force Elements in-service during the period of the Report. Annexe B correctly included three of these four vessels which were still in service between April and July 1998, but failed to include a footnote on their pay off dates. The fourth vessel—Itchen—was paid off at the end of February 1998, outside the reporting period, and should not therefore have been included in this table.

A further error has been found in the Royal Navy Force Structure table at Annexe B of the Performance Report. The section detailing the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Force Elements shows only one Roll-on Roll-off vessel, Sea Crusader, in service during the period. In this case, the strength of the Fleet was understated as the second vessel in the class, Sea Centurion, entered Immediate Operational Service on 19 October 1998.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what written representations on the proposals for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency public–private partnership have been received by his Department from the United States Department of Defense. [112369]

Mr. Hoon: Officials in my Department have received written representations on the proposal to implement a public-private-partnership (PPP) for the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA) from the following representatives in the US Department of Defense (DOD):

The Hon. Jacques Gansler, Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Technology);

Dr. Dolores Etter, Deputy Under Secretary of Defense (Science and Technology);

Walter Hollis, Deputy Under Secretary of the Army (Operational Research);

Lieutenant General Kadish, Director Ballistic Missile Defence Organisation; and John Manclark, Director Test and Evaluation, US Air Force.

In addition, officials have received a number of electronic mails from Dr. Craig Dorman, the Chief Scientist of the Office of Naval Research, the DOD's nominated focal point for DERA PPP.

Comment in this written correspondence has focused on the following areas:

Maintenance of existing UK/US Government interactions in science and technology following PPP;

Protection of security and commercially sensitive information, and the application of the proposed "compliance regime";

Legal and contractual issues associated with the proposed PPP;

The need to avoid possible conflicts of interest arising from a private sector DERA's commercial imperatives and government functions;

Possible alternative PPP options and their ability to meet both governments' requirements.

French Navy

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions have taken place involving (a) officials and (b) Ministers from his Department on arrangements for ballistic missile submarines from the French Navy to visit the UK. [112650]

Mr. Hoon: We hope that a visit by a French ballistic missile submarine to HM Naval Base, Clyde, will be possible later this year. Initial discussions have taken place at official level on the arrangements for such a visit; further meetings are planned. No discussions involving Ministers have taken place.

Victory Gate

Mr. Viggers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long the main gates at Victory Gate, Royal Naval Yard, Portsmouth, are to remain closed. [R] [112689]

Dr. Moonie: The main gates were shut for a matter of a few days to allow essential maintenance work to be undertaken. The gates were re-opened on 24 February 2000 for pedestrian access, although vehicle access will remain restricted until work is completed on the Millennium Walk in the Heritage Area of the Naval Base.

Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what his Department's policy is on the use of anthrax vaccine which has passed its recommended use-by date; and if such vaccine has been used since 1990. [112999]

Dr. Moonie: Our policy is only to use vaccine which has a current licence granted by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA). Our stocks of anthrax vaccine that were procured for the 1990–91 Gulf Conflict have, since 1993, had their shelf-life extended by the MCA on a number of occasions and only these stocks have been given to personnel.

UK Hydrographic Office

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the UK Hydrographic Office for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111735]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the United Kingdom Hydrographic Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from J. P. Clarke to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

You recently asked the Secretary of State for Defence a Parliamentary Question relating to the United Kingdom Hydrographic Office (UKHO). As the matters you raise fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of the UKHO, I have been asked to reply to you direct. The Agency's performance on key targets were reported in our Annual Report and Accounts 1998–99, which is available in the Library of the House.

The following targets for 1998–99 were achieved:

Key Target 2 To achieve 100% of the endorsed and funded Defence Programme to cost, quality and timeliness targets as defined in Tasking Authorisation Forms (TAFs);

Key Target 3 To meet short-notice Defence operational requirements within agreed timescales;

Key Target 4 Implement, by 30 September 1998, new performance indicators of product availability and service levels for response times as perceived from our customers' perspective for improving safe navigation;

Key Target 5 To break even taking one year with another; and

Key Target 6 To achieve an average Return on Capital Employed (ROCE) during the plan period of 7.5 per cent.

The following factors affected the outcome of the remaining two targets for 1998–99:

Key Target 1 To process and promulgate priority safety information within stated timescales from receipt of data.

The five performance indicators that contribute to this target and the actual annual per cent. compliance achieved for each is as follows:

1. 100 per cent. of Radio Navigational warnings (RNW) within thirty minutes for SafetyNet and four hours for NAVTEX. Achieved 100 per cent.
2. 100 per cent. textural Notices to Mariners from textural sources within 5 weeks. Achieved 98 per cent.
3. 100 per cent. textural Notices to Mariners from graphic sources within 10 weeks. Achieved 94 per cent.
4. 100 per cent. Notice to Mariners - issued as Blocks within 15 weeks. Achieved 100 per cent.
5. 100 per cent. Urgent New Editions within 24 weeks. Achieved 99 per cent.

The Notice to Mariners performance indicators are challenging and any failure to meet them is examined for reasons and ways to improve our processes. The Urgent New Editions Performance reflects the delay of one new edition due to higher priority work.

Key Target 7 To achieve efficiency savings of 13.5 per cent. of controllable costs (based on controllable costs for FY95–96) by 31 March 2001.

This Key Target is not due for completion until 31 March 2001. The United Kingdom Hydrographic Office has achieved a net positive efficiency and is on target to meet the five-year objective of 13.5 per cent.

To improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000, the UKHO detailed a range of improvement measures in a five year Corporate Plan that was approved by the responsible Minister. The plan includes proposals for both short and long-term Improvements and details a range of capital investments, performance reviews and an efficiency plan.

RAF Training Group Defence

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the RAF Training Group Defence for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111739]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Training Group Defence Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from G. E. Willis to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the RAF Training Group Defence Agency performance against its 1998–99 Key Targets as these matters fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Agency had 4 Key Targets which were published in the Training Group Defence Agency Annual Report and Accounts 1998–1999, a copy of which was placed in the Library of the House.

Key Target 1—Quality of Product. This target is concerned with the achievement of customer satisfaction with the quality of graduate trainees, as reflected in Customer Advisory Committee reports to the Air Officer Commanding in-Chief. The specific target for 1998–99 was the development of a quality monitoring system by 31 March 1999, which was achieved.

Key Target 2—Efficiency. The target was to deliver the savings that accrue from the efficiencies planned for FY 98–99. The requirement for 1998–99 was a saving of £10.042M. The actual savings made of £11.529M means this target was also achieved.

Key Target 3a—Quantity of Output (Flying Training). This target concerns the percentage of trained personnel delivered against RAF requirements. The target set for 1998–99 was 96.0%. The actual achievement was 78.8%. Full output was only achieved in the case of Air Engineers. The reasons for shortfalls in other areas of flying training were as follows:

Fast jet pilots—operational commitments, which took qualified flying instructors away from the flying training task and a temporary problem with aircraft serviceability were the main factors.

Multi engine pilots—student numbers had to be reduced because a backlog was developing due to the delayed delivery of the C130J impacting on the ability of the front line to absorb newly trained pilots.

Rotary Wing pilots—a shortfall arose as the failure rate of trainees was slightly higher than forecast.

Navigators—a temporary instructor shortage and poor weather resulted in the cancellation of one course. Additionally, some navigator recruits were switched to pilot training during their Initial Officer Training to meet increased demand for pilots.

Airmen Aircrew disciplines—insufficient recruits to meet the full requirements.

Key Target 3b—Quantity of Output (Ground Training). This target also concerns the percentage of trained personnel delivered against RAF requirements. The target set for 1998–99 was 97.0%.

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

The actual achievement was 96.3%. The shortfall was due to recruitment difficulties in certain trades, most notably the RAF Regiment.

Key Target 4—Development of Output Costings and Unit Cost Measures. This target covered the need to provide full output costings and associated unit cost and efficiency measures for the Agency by FY 00–01. The 1998–99 target which was to produce an Output Costing Model was achieved.

You ask what action is being taken to improve performance. The remedial actions taken by the Training Group Defence Agency are as follows:

All non-essential flying tasks cancelled to maximise the flying training hours available.

Management action has increased the serviceability of aircraft and improved the provision of spares.

The Hercules Multi-Engine Operational Conversion Unit's planned output is being increased to eliminate the backlog of students.

The RAF Personnel Management Agency has addressed the availability of instructors.

Recruiting strategy has been reviewed and as a result we are targeting populations where recruitment has been poor.

In addition to the recruitment measures other actions to improve performance against Ground Training targets include pre-training course visits by potential recruits to the RAF Regiment Depot and the development of new training courses that provide the opportunity to gain Modern Apprenticeships. I am pleased to say that these are proving very popular with the recruitment of aircraft technicians.

I hope that this is helpful.

Defence Communications Services

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Communications Services for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111748]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Communication Services Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from A. J. Raper to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence, about the targets for the Defence Communication Services Agency, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility, being the Chief Executive of the Agency.

I am pleased to report that the DCSA achieved all of its Key Targets for the Financial Year 1998/99. Further information is contained on Page 10 of the DCSA Annual Report 1998/1999, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The DCSA Key Targets for 1998/99 were essentially developmental targets for the first year of the Agency's existence. They were primarily concerned with system availability as opposed to measuring of a service. This was a reflection of the approach historically taken by Defence in the provision of information services. However, it is the quality and availability of the services which are of importance to Defence customers and the Key Targets for FY 1999/2000 therefore focus on measurement of these services. Clearly, the new Key Targets needed to be both quantitative and measurable. I have included details of them at Annex A for your information.

Given the need to focus upon the provisions of services, the DCSA has changed its internal management processes accordingly and reviews the performance of its services against the new Key Targets on a monthly basis. The information is presented to the Management Board using a Balanced Scorecard approach, supported by a comprehensive monthly report, which provides detailed analysis of Agency performance against its Business Plan and all 4 Key Targets. The Agency has improved performance against the targets by designing and then refining the internal business processes that are needed to deliver services. The proposed Key Targets for Financial Year 2000/01 will not change as radically as the change between the Agency's first years with the exception of the inclusion of a new efficiency target: to achieve an improvement in efficiency by reducing the average unit cost of output for current DCSA products by 5% per annum.

DCSA Key Targets For 1999/00

1. KT1—Service Quality—To achieve a mean 95% of the quality of service performance targets in the Baseline Services Document for the timeliness, accuracy and protection of information transfer services except where other specific targets have been agreed with customers.

2. KT2—Service Provisioning—To commission 90% of new requests for service on or before the dates agreed with customers.

3. KT3 Service Restoration—To restore 95% of interrupted services classed as operationally urgent within 4 hours or within specific other periods agreed with customers.

4. KT4 Operator Services—To answer 85% of calls to DCSA telephone Operator Assistance Centres in UK and Germany within 15 seconds.

5. The following targets were also proposed as Key Targets for FY 1999–2000 but were deemed inappropriate. They have, however, been included within the Agency's Corporate Plan as strategic objectives:

a. Customer Satisfaction—To be graded Moderate or High in 70% of customer surveys.

b. Efficiency Measurement—To establish a baseline of unit costs of the DCSA's outputs against which efficiency targets can be set in future years.

Medical Supplies Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Medical Supplies Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111744]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Medical Supplies Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Brian Nimick to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

1. I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Medical Supplies agency's performance and targets for financial year 1998/99 as these matters fall within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Medical Supplies Agency.

2. The details of those targets for 1998/99, which were achieved are shown below:

a. The Key Targets of this Agency for 1998/99 which were achieved:

(1) Key Target 1. To build, completed and to time and within budget, for all three Services, 95% of the programme for kits, outfits and packs, as defined in endorsed Equipment Tables and as directed by Director Medical Programme and Plans, at the Surgeon General's Headquarters.

(2) Achievement and factors affecting the outcome. The build programme originally defined was met apart from one tranche. In terms of modules completed this represented a 98% success, so the Key Target was achieved. The one tranche not completed was deferred by Director Medical Programme and Plans, because of other urgent operational commitments. These accounted to more than the postponed tranche, but were successfully completed by the Medical Supplies Agency.

(3) Key Target 2. To meet 100% of the Services' requirements for stocked medical material blood products for operations.

(4) Achievement. As at the fourth quarter of 1998/99, all requirements for stocked medical material and blood products for operations had been met despite heavy operational commitments.

(5) Key Target 3. To meet 98% of the Services' requirements for stocked medical material and blood products for exercises and training.

(6) Achievement. The services' planned requirements for exercises and training were fully met by the fourth quarter of the financial year 1998/99.

(7) Key Target 5. To improve the ratio of stock held from 1.30 to 1.72.

(8) Achievement. The Stockturn figures for the financial year 1998/99 was 1.96.

(9) Key Target 6. By 31 December 1998, the Medical. Supplies Agency will have set in place a mechanism, which communicates the full cost of the drugs and medical material supplied. The communicated costs will be in a format which is acceptable to the Agency's major customers, whether or not they have a Service Level Agreement.

(10) Achievement. The means of communicating costs was in place by 31 December 1998. The format has been continually developed by the Agency and its customers.

b. The Key Target of this Agency for 1998/99 which was not achieved with factors affecting the outcome are as follows:

(1) Key Target 4. to meet 85% of demands for Category B items, within the Medical Supplies Agency's new charter standard (next day delivery of priority demands; 72 hours for routine); and 95% within one week.

(2) Achievement and factors affecting the outcome. The Annual Report for 1998/99 recorded an overall improvement throughout the year. The success rate for the fourth quarter was 78% achieved within 1 week for priority demands, with 56% within 1–3 days. Overall the figures show 54% of all demands were achieved within 1 week and 45% of demands were achieved within 1–3 days.

(3) Comment: This new Charter Standard was introduced at the start of the year, which was a step change form the MOD standard of 28 working days for routine delivery. The standard was regarded as aspirational and the first target speculative. In the event, our plans suffered because of an unforecast and substantial increase in the number of demands presented over the period: up from 66,000 in the first quarter of 1997/98 to 78,500 in the last quarter of 1998/99. Had the volume of demand remained constant, it is probable that this target would have been met. In the overall assessment of this Agency's performance Surgeon General accepted these difficulties.

3. Details of the actions taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999/2000 are as follows:

a. A complete review of the inventory to ensure the correct balance between items supplied from stock and those procured to order (benefit all Key Targets).

b. The extension of E-Commerce to cover a larger range of high volume items in the inventory (Key Target 4).

c. The introduction of the use of production orders in the modular build programme (Key Targets 1, 2 and 3).

d. An extensive programme to dispose of unwanted items (Key Target 5).

e. The introduction of computerised interim stock management at the Medical Distribution Centres (Key Target 4).

4. The Medical Supplies Agency's Annual Report and Accounts for 1998/99 are currently being produced. Copies will be lodged in the libraries of The House of Commons and The House of Lords following publication.

Ships Support Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Ships Support Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111737]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Ships Support Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from John Coles to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence in which you asked for a list of those targets for the Ships Support Agency for 1998–99 which were achieved and those which were not, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case. You also asked for details of the action taken by the Agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Ships Support Agency.

The information that you seek, including a list of the initiatives we are pursuing to improve our performance, is contained in my Agency's Annual Report and Accounts for 1998/99, in particular in the Section entitled Review of Performance. A copy of the report is held in the Library of the House.

In addition to the initiatives referred to in the Agency's report, the introduction of Smart Procurement and the establishment within the Agency of a number of Integrated Project Teams will help to streamline the acquisition and support process from cradle to grave. These too are expected to contribute to improvements in performance, if not in 1999–00, then in the following and subsequent financial years.

Queen Victoria School

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Queen Victoria School for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111758]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Queen Victoria School. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Brian Raine to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence, about the targets for Queen Victoria School, as this falls within my area of responsibility being the Chief Executive of the Agency.

It is pleasing to report that Queen Victoria School achieved all its Key Targets for 1998–99 and the results of that financial year's performance were included in the Annual Report and Accounts which were laid before Parliament on 26th July 1999. For your ease of reference, I am providing extract details of the Key Targets at Annex A.

The Agency's Key Targets (KTs) are reviewed annually by the Board of HM Commissioners for the School and the Adjutant General's staff, to ensure targets are taut, realistic and demanding. No changes to the School's academic targets (KTs 1 - 3) are planned for the year 1999–2000, since these are considered sufficiently challenging by HM Commissioners, who have taken advice from HM inspectors. In line with the continuing drive for efficiency, the School's per capita rate which has remained largely unchanged fro 1999/2000, will be set at a lower and more challenging target for 2000/01. In addition the income generation target has been reviewed and a more challenging target is being proposed for 2000/01.

Achieve a staying on rate at School for S4 to S5 of at least 68% based on a 3-year trend.

This target was achieved in that 69% stayed on from S4 to S5.

Target 2

Exceeded by 2% the average percentage pass rate for all Scottish presentations obtaining 5 or more Credit awards at Standard Grade.

This target was achieved in that 34% attained at least 5 Credit awards at Standard Grade. The National average was 30 %.

Target 3

Achieve a percentage of the presentations at Higher Grade achieving A to C grade greater than or equal to the Scottish average based on a 3-year trend.

Based on the last 3 years the School average was 69% which is the same as the National average: thus the target was achieved.

Target 4

To achieve a pupil per capita cost of no more than £17,246 (at 1997/98 prices) by March 1999. 1997/98 target was £17,420.

This target was achieved. The pupil per capita cost was £14,458.

Target 5

To generate commercial income to the School of at least £20,000.

This target was achieved. Commercial income of £22,984 was generated.

Army Base Repair Organisation

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Army Base Repair Organisation for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111766]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Army Base Repair Organisation. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from J. R. Drew to Mr. Menzie Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about (a) those targets of the Army Base Repair Organisation (ABRO) for 1998/99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) the action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999/00. This falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive.

The performance of the Agency against its Key Targets is published each in the ABRO Report and Accounts; a document that receives wide distribution to those within ABRO's sector of the defence community. In 1998/99 ABRO was set the five key targets listed at the Annex to this letter and achieved the required level of performance against all but one of them.

In 1999/2000 ABRO has continued to focus on the delivery of service to the Armed Forces. At the same time, following the announcement in the Strategic Defence Review that ABRO should become a Trading Fund, a challenging change programme is being pursued to get the Agency to where it needs to be in order to vest as a Trading Fund. The Agency is on target to commence shadow trading with the Ministry of Defence on a progressive basis from April 2001. Formal Trading Fund Vesting is planned for April 2002. A full record of Agency activities and progress, including performance against its targets, will be included in the Report and Accounts for the year ending 31 March 2000, which will be available later in the year. I will ensure that you receive a copy.

ABRO Performance against its key targets for 1998/99:

Key target 1—Throughput Target

To deliver a responsive service which matches the needs of the customer in peace and for operations to the agreed timeliness, quantity and quality criteria, to the maximum extent possible with available resources.

Result—achieved

Key target 2—Financial Performance Target

To remain within ABRO's allocated budget

Result—not achieved

The allocated cash budget for the Agency was £141.6M, while spend amounted to £144.8M, which was 2.3% over allocation. This exceeds the +/-1.5% tolerance set as the performance indicator for this target. However ABRO deliberately brought forward planned capital expenditure from 1999/00 to 1998/99 and this action contributed to higher budgetary level requirements. Consequently, it had an unfortunately effect upon the ABRO key target.

Key target 3—Efficiency Target

To reduce the ratio of labour costs to hours of production by 2% from those of the averaged last three years.

Result—achieved

Key target 4—Quality Target

To deliver objective measures of customer satisfaction

Result—achieved

Key target 5—Milestone Target

To deliver an Implementation plan embracing the endorsed recommendations from the Agency and ES Next Steps Reviews.

Result—achieved.

RAF Logistic Support Services

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the RAF Logistic Support Services for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111757]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Logistics Support Services Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from K. A. Bradshaw to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

Parliamentary questions from the right hon. Menzies Campbell CBE QC MP (Liberal Democrats) (Fife North East) concerning the achievement of logistics support services agency key targets:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about achievement of Logistics Support Services Agency (LSSA) key targets as the matter falls within my area of responsibility. I have numbered the replies to match your questions.

a. LSSA targets

(1) Achieved:

Percentage

Serial	Key target from LSSA corporate plan	1998–99 Target	Outturn
1.	To produce deliverables by the target date agreed with the sponsor	85	89
2.	To deliver outputs at the cost agreed with the sponsor	80	81
3.	To produce deliverables to the sponsor's complete satisfaction	90	97

This year was the first that pan-agency performance targets were set. As we had no knowledge of what was achievable, the targets were tentative. Nevertheless, the targets at serials 1 to 3 were all achieved.

(2) Not Achieved

Percentage

Serial	Key target from LSSA corporate plan	1998–99 Target	Outturn
4.	To achieve a reduction in the cost of a productive hour	3	See below

It was not possible to ascertain the reduction in the cost of a productive hour in 1998–99 because there was no agency-wide system available to record man-hours. Although the LSSA Task and Resource Accounting Management (TRAMS) System was introduced to perform this function, its roll out was delayed by technical problems.

b. Action taken:

The targets for 1999–2000 in the Corporate Plan, which has been placed in the library of the House, remained the same as those for 1989–1999. This was recognition of the immaturity of our target setting. However, the 2000–2001 targets had been made more challenging as follows: serial 1—90%, serial 2—85%, serial 3—92%. The target for serial 4 remained unaltered at 3%. However, TRAMS is now is use in the majority of LSS business areas and the data recorded during 1999–2000 will establish a productive hour baseline for future years.

Naval Manning Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Naval Manning agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [11176!]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Naval Manning Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Jeremy de Halpert to Mr. Menzies Campbell dated 6 March 2000:

In your recent Parliamentary Question, you sought a range of information concerning the targets placed upon the Naval Management Agency (NMA) for 1998–99. You also asked what action the Agency had taken to improve performance against its targets in 1990–00. I have been asked to reply as the Chief Executive of the NMA.

The information you requested is attached to this letter. Details of NMA's performance against its targets will be published shortly in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99. I will arrange for a copy of the Report to be sent to you as soon as it is available.

I hope this is helpful.

Naval Manning Agency—Performance Against Targets—1998–99

Deployment

Filled Officer Billets:

Achieved: 94.2%

Overall performance continued to be satisfactory. A similar outturn to last year has been achieved despite a more difficult manning climate that has seen a deterioration in the balance of the Office Strength to Requirement. The RN was 280 Officers short of its requirement as at 1 February 1999 compared to 149 Officers on 1 April 1998.

Filled Rating/Other Rank Billets

Targets:

Ratings: greater than 89%—Not met

Royal Marines Other Ranks greater than 88%—Not met

Achieved:

Ratings: 87.4%

Royal Marines Other Ranks 85.3%

The NMA's performance is little changed from last year (88% and 85.1% respectively) and should be viewed in the light of the difficulties faced by the recruiting Agency in 1998–99 in meeting requested gains to the trained strength.

In year, a defining balance of Strength to Requirement was evident for Royal Navy Ratings and Royal Marines Other Ranks but the rate of decline has now been arrested. This has been achieved through a combination of close monitoring of gains to the trained strength and Premature Voluntary Release figures and greater accuracy in the forecasting and monitoring of demographic trends. This work is being developed during 1990–00. The introduction of the five year second open engagement (20E(5), to complement the existing ten year 20E, has also provided the Agency with added flexibility in its manpower management.

Manpower Planning

Variation of Strength to Requirement

Target: Plus 1% to Minus 2%—Not met

Achieved: Minus 3.3%

This figure is calculated on the basis of a 3-year running average. This reporting method takes into consideration an element of the lag between planning decisions and the consequent inflow of trained manpower and provides a more effective and accurate measure of the NMA's planning performance than an in year 12 month running average.

The NMA's Owner has reduced the upper level of the target for 1999–00 form 11% to zero to reflect the manning difficulties encountered in 1998–99 and ensure that the aim is directed at meeting future manpower requirements without over-providing.

Career Management

Percentage of Officers receiving the required Notice of Move [1]

Target: Greater than 60%—Met

Achieved: 67.6%

The disparity between this target and that for ratings/other ranks reflects the ability of Officers to negotiate their next career move directly with their Appointing Officer

Percentage of Ratings/Other Ranks receiving the required Notice of Move [2]

Achieved: 99.5%

The continuing imbalance between Strength and Requirement has made the achievement of this target particularly challenging

Percentage drafts where Minimum Time Ashore (MTA) [3] criteria are met

Achieved: 99.9%

While the NMA has met this target, the difficult manpower supply climate has led to a growth in the number of personnel nearing the MTA criteria

Efficiency

Numeric Reduction in Gapping

Target: 7.5% reduction in gapping—Not met

Achieved: 7%

The high- degree of deploying turbulence and recruiting difficulties experienced in 1998–99 limited the scope for reducing the level of gapping. Earlier efficiencies in the utilisation of the manning margin have also reduced the potential for further savings. To reflect these factors, the Agency's target for the coming year has been adjusted to 5%.

The NMA successfully introduced its Customer Review process in summer 1998. This has helped the Agency to develop its understanding of the issues, besides gapping, that are of concern to its customers. The process has also led to several changes in the way the Agency operates, especially in terms of its external communication and data presentation. The NMA is confident that this will be reflected in the results obtained from the Review, which commenced in April 1999. Additionally, it is intended that the European Foundation Quality Management Model should be introduced into the Agency. This will ensure that NMA continues to develop along the most effective lines and that its performance reflects best practice.

Benchmarking Exercises

Target: Two exercises—Met

Achieved: Two exercises

The NMA's Customer Review Process was the list of these exercises. The second exercise was conducted with the RAF.

Financial

Production of Accounts

Target: To produce Accounts for Period from April 99 to March 99—Met Achieved: Accounts laid in January 2000.

Comment: None

[1] Within four months of change of their employment

[2] Less than three months for shore service and five months for sea service

[3] The Minimum Time Ashore criterion is a Personnel Management Standard that aims to ensure a reasonable amount of time ashore between sea-going drafts. It differs between Rates and length of Service in a sea draft and is not applicable to Officers.

Defence Secondary Care Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Secondary Care Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111755]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Secondary Care Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from C. G. Callow to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

Performance Against Key Targets

1. I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the Defence Secondary Care Agency's (DSCA) performance in meeting its 1998/99 Key Targets and the steps the Agency is taking to improve upon this in 1999/2000. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the DSCA.

2. The Agency's Key Targets for 1998/99 and its performance in delivering these is set out on page 21 of the Agency's 1998/99 Annual Report, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. The 1999/2000 Key Targets are shown on page 22.

3. I am aware that Key Targets are designed to set and stimulate year-on-year improvement in Agency performance and I am committed to meeting challenging targets for the DSCA. However, these targets must also be realistic.

4. In 1998/99 the DSCA believed that real performance in patient waiting times was masked by inadequate data reporting systems and that improvements would emerge both by better reporting and better achievement. Neither assumption materialised and it became clear that some targets were out of reach and that adjustments had to be made when setting the Agency's 1999/2000 Key Targets. Accordingly, the performance measurement in respect of Key Target 2 was reduced to the 1997/98 level. However, continuing shortages of clinical manpower, coupled with operational demands upon a limited resource, mean that achievement of the Agency's 1999/2000 Key Targets, even where reduced to 1997/98 levels, continues to pose a stiff challenge.

5. Nevertheless, as a result of great effort, the Agency has to date achieved its Key Target 1, which it regards as the highest priority for the Agency, and it is taking active steps to improve waiting time performance. A senior officer has been appointed with specific responsibility for performance management and the Agency meets regularly with representatives from the single Services to discuss ways of improving patient throughput, for example, by reducing the incidence of Service 'Did Not Attend' appointments. Other patient filtering mechanisms have also been introduced, for example, in the field of orthopaedics, the speciality most in demand by the Services. This aims to identify those patients whose conditions do not require them to see a consultant and who could be treated outwith the Agency by primary care physiotherapists, thereby enabling the DSCA to treat more patients. Again manpower difficulties, coupled with the need to introduce new financial accounting systems, have hindered progress in developing new efficiency targets for the Agency but this is being addressed. The Agency is making great strides in the field of Clinical Governance. Individual military training requirements have been reflected in the Agency's Corporate Training Plan and the Agency is discussing with the single Services ways of de-conflicting exercise requirements to spread the impact on the Agency, thus enabling it to meet its obligations in the area most easily.

6. I hope this is helpful.

Pay and Personnel Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Pay and Personnel Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111759]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Pay and Personnel Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from M. A. Rowe to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the targets of the Pay & Personnel Agency as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Pay & Personnel Agency is responsible for providing pay and personnel services for the Ministry of Defence. The Agency's performance against its key targets for 1998/99 was reported in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts, House of Commons Paper No. 595, which was laid before the House on 16 July 1999.

The key targets covered performance in the areas of service delivery, customer satisfaction, efficiency, systems, and people. All targets were achieved except those covering the timeliness of payments, where performance ranged from 97.3% to 99.9% against the aim of 100%, and the achievement of Investors in People accreditation. With several million payments to make each year across all areas of the PPA's business these shortfalls were the result of inevitable but minimal processing errors. Recognising this realism but also the need not to abandon the aim of payment on time every time, the key service delivery targets for the current year have included just a single Agency wide target of 100%. During 1998/1999 the Agency launched a major internal efficiency review which has now delivered efficiency savings well above the Departmental target but which persuaded us to defer the Investors in People assessment in view of the temporary turbulence caused by the review. Training was also a factor and the Agency is carrying out an intensive training programme which is intended to improve performance across the range of services provided and which will contribute to the Agency's aim to achieve Investors in People accreditation before the end of this financial year.

Weather Information

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what arrangements will exist for the provision of weather information for aircrew using the Northumberland low-flying area following the planned closure of the manned Meteorological Office stations at RAF Boulmer and at Newcastle. [112824]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mr. Alan Beith, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the provision of weather information for aircrew using the Northumberland Low-Flying Area (LFA 12). This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of The Met. Office.

Forecasts for LFA 12 are prepared by our forecasters at military airfields. They use a range of data including observations from Newcastle Weather Centre and RAF Boulmer, and also computer-generated forecasts, rainfall radar, satellite imagery and observations from other sites, like Carlisle, Eskdalemuir, Spadeadam and Newcastle airport.

The provision of these forecasts will not be adversely affected by changes we are making to our network of weather centres and observations sites. Nor will their quality. We recognise that our customers, both public and private, are under pressure to reduce their costs, which, in turn, will continue to place downward pressure on Met. Office prices. We are, therefore, continuing to put emphasis on the lowering of unit costs, while at the same time improving the quality of output. Increased automation and rationalisation of our forecasting and observations networks are important parts of this strategy.

When Newcastle Weather Centre closes, an automatic observing station will be retained. Similarly, if a decision is taken to cease manned observations at RAF Boulmer, an automatic system will be maintained in that area. While these automatic systems do not provide all of the elements contained in a 'human' observation, they are capable of reporting more frequently and will be enhanced as new sensors are developed. They may also have co-located CCTV cameras; two such cameras will soon e deployed at Eskdalemuir and St Mary's Loch and will provide useful additional data for aircraft operating in the Borders area.

In summary, the 'human' elements of the observations from Boulmer and Newcastle Weather Centre are not crucial to the task of forecasting for LFA 12 and, given the other advances that are being introduced, I can assure you that there will be no degradation in the service provided to aircrew using the area.

Kosovo

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many de-mining staff his Department has in (a) Mostar and (b) Pristina. [113353]

Dr. Moonie: There are no British military Explosive Ordnance Disposal (EOD) personnel in Mostar. One team of four personnel is currently based in Pristina, and there are three further teams at other locations in Kosovo.

Under UN arrangements in Kosovo, demining is predominantly the task of a number of commercial contractors and Non-Governmental Organisations (NGOs). British military EOD teams undertake demining tasks in support of KFOR operations, although they have also responded positively to local requests to clear unexploded ordnance where there was a pressing humanitarian need.

Food Products (Welfare Standards)

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the prescribed welfare standards which govern imported food products supplied to HM Forces. [112967]

Dr. Moonie: The supply of food products to HM Forces by its contractor "3663" is governed by contract conditions based on UK and EC trade quality standards. In the case of meat sourced in EC countries this is based on standards laid down by the EC Meat Commission and set down in The Meat Buyers Guide.

Mozambique

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to deploy (a) HMS 'Ocean' and (b) other RN ships to Mozambique. [112970]

Mr. Hoon: We have diverted the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Fort George from the Gulf. The ship is currently en route to Mozambique to assist in the international relief effort; we have no plans to divert HMS 'Ocean' or other RN ships at this time.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Commission Reform

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on progress made on Commission reform since the joint declaration at the British-Italian summit of July 1999. [112343]

Mr. Vaz: The Council of Ministers has discussed Commission reform on several occasions since the British-Italian Summit in July 1999. This year, in January, the Commission published the Kinnock report, which the Government strongly support.

"Your Britain, Your Europe"

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the basis of his oral statement of 15 February 2000, Official Report, column 760, that 3.5 million jobs depend on UK membership of the European Union. [112388]

Mr. Vaz: The figure reflects the jobs ultimately dependent on British exports to the other 14 members of the European Union. It includes jobs in indigenous British businesses exporting to the rest of the EU, inward investors locating here as a result of our being the gateway to the whole of the Single Market, and enterprises who in turn make supplies to those companies. It excludes jobs dependent on exports to the fast-growing markets of the EU applicant countries.

The figure is in line with independent research carried out for Britain in Europe by the National Institute of Economic and Social Research and by Professor Iain Begg at the South Bank University. Both of these reports conclude that over three million jobs are linked with our membership of the European Union.

Press Rebuttal Unit

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what guidance he has issued to his Department's EU Press Rebuttal Unit; what is its cost in the current financial year; how many staff are assigned to it; and how many rebuttals it has issued to date. [112424]

Mr. Vaz: I have decided to rebut press articles which contain factual inaccuracies about Government policy towards Europe or our membership of the EU. This entails no extra costs to the FCO budget. There are no dedicated FCO staff assigned to this task. Since the beginning of the year, I have written 17 rebuttals, of which seven have been published.

MOX Fuel

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what occasions since 15 December 1999 he, other Ministers and officials of his Department, have raised with Japanese Ministers and officials nuclear commerce and MOX plutonium exports to Japan; and if he will place in the Library copies of all correspondence since May 1997 he has had with Japanese Ministers or officials on MOX plutonium fuel. [112357]

Mr. Hain: Since 15 December, the only occasion when FCO Ministers have discussed nuclear commerce and MOX fuel exports with Japanese Ministers was on 12 January, when my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary met the Japanese Foreign Minister in London. There have been many occasions when these subjects have been raised between FCO and Japanese officials. These contacts are commonplace under the UK/Japan Nuclear Co-operation Agreement on the Peaceful Use of Atomic Energy.

I have not corresponded with Japanese Ministers or officials on MOX fuel since May 1997.

Nuclear Policy

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if the work of the Anglo-French Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy and Doctrine has led to adoption of joint positions with France in international bodies or forums; [112417]

(2) what activities have been undertaken in the Anglo-French Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy and Doctrine since January 1998; and if he will place in the Library the (a) reports and (b) other documents produced by the Joint Commission since that date; [112421]

(3) on how many occasions since 1992 officials of the French Government have visited his Department to discuss nuclear co-operation; and if he will make a statement; [112420]

(4) on how many occasions since 1992 officials from his Department have visited France to discuss nuclear co-operation; and if he will make a statement; [112419]

(5) if he will list the official discussions and meetings between Ministers and officials in his Department and their French counterparts since November 1995 to pursue the implementation of the 1995 Anglo-French Joint Statement on Nuclear Co-operation; [112418]

(6) what discussions involving Ministers and officials of his Department have recently taken place or are planned within the Anglo-French Joint Commission on Nuclear Policy and Doctrine concerning joint or co-ordinated nuclear missile submarine patrols with the French Navy. [112422]

Mr. Vaz: British and French officials meet frequently to discuss nuclear issues of mutual interest. One powerful example of the co-operation which has resulted was the UK and France jointly depositing our instruments of ratification of the Comprehensive Test Ban Treaty in April 1998.

The UK/French Joint Nuclear Commission normally meets at official level every six months, alternately in London and paris. The Commission's discussions cover a wide range of issues, but they exclude, by joint agreement, the operational aspects of our respective deterrent forces. There are no plans for joint or co-ordinated submarine patrols.

I am withholding records of these meetings under Exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Kosovo

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the European Commissioner, Mr. Javier Solana about the numbers of international police officers in Kosovo. [112485]

Mr. Hain: The European Secretary General/High Representative, Mr. Javier Solana, appealed to EU Foreign Ministers at the beginning of February for more police officers for UNIP. This followed a request from the UN for additional police deployments, to which we have responded by doubling our contribution to the UN international police force in Kosovo.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations have been made to him by the head of UNMIK, about the numbers of international police officers in Kosovo; [112488]

(2) what representations he has received from the UN Secretary-General about the numbers of international police officers in Kosovo. [112486]

Mr. Hain: The UK, along with its Quint, EU and G8 partners, is in regular contact with Secretary-General Annan and his Special Representative for Kosovo, Bernard Kouchner, about all aspects of the international effort in Kosovo, including the need for more police officers. The UN Secretariat has made two requests for police officers, both of which the UK has been able to respond to positively, bringing the total number of UK police officers pledged to UNIP to 120.

Pakistan

Laura Moffatt: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of difficulties experienced by former Pakistani politicians returning to Pakistan from the UK; and what monitoring the High Commission is carrying out. [112489]

Mr. Hain: We are not aware of any problems faced by former Pakistani politicians returning to Pakistan from the UK. Our High Commission in Islamabad continues to follow closely all aspects of life in Pakistan, including the political scene.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112670]

Mr. Hain: The annual Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions list public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

Since the publication of the 1999 edition of "Public Bodies", no new public bodies have been established. However the Commonwealth Institute has ceased to be a FCO non-departmental public body and is now an independent charity, as I announced to the house on 1 February 2000, Official Report, column 542W.

United Nations Human Rights Commission

Mr. Syms: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the British Government have to raise the human rights situations in (a) China, (b) Mexico and (c) Burma at the forthcoming session of the United Nations Human Rights Commission. [112674]

Mr. Hain: The information is as follows:

China

We are at present discussing with our EU partners our policies on China at this years Commission on Human Rights (CHR).

Burma

The UK, together with EU partners, will jointly table a strong resolution on Burma at CHR. The resolution will refer to the whole catalogue of human rights violations in Burma and call for the UN Special Rapporteur to be allowed access.

Mexico

We are committed to helping Mexico improve its human rights record. But where criticism is due, the UK will support a strong reference to Mexico in the EU omnibus country statement at the CHR.

GCHQ

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what percentage of the costs of GCHQ are met by the United States Government. [113119]

Mr. Robin Cook: None of GCHQ's costs are met by the US Government.

Congo

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors were taken into account in evaluating applications for export licences for arms to parties involved in the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo. [112702]

Mr. Hain: We uphold the EU arms embargo (imposed 7 April 1993), which prohibits the export of equipment on the Military List from the EU to the DRC. We are similarly upholding the UK sanctions on non-governmental forces in Rwanda, which also apply to the sale and supply of arms to neighbouring states if they are for use in Rwanda; and on UNITA rebels in Angola.

Since 28 July 1997, we have examined export licence applications to all destinations against the new criteria that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary announced that day, Official Report, columns 26–29W. In addition, we have also examined applications against the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Sales since it was agreed in June 1998.

The Prime Minister's reply to a question from the hon. Member for Richmond Park (Dr. Tonge) on 9 February 2000, Official Report, columns 184–85, set out the basis of our new tighter policy on arms sales to countries intervening in the DRC.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what involvement his Department has had recently in attempting to find a political solution to the problems of the Democratic Republic of Congo; and if he will make a statement. [112697]

Mr. Hain: Britain is playing an active and constructive role in international efforts to resolve the crisis in the Democratic Republic of the Congo. I represented Britain at January's Security Council meeting, which secured re-endorsement of the Lusaka Agreement and strong support for the deployment of a UN observer force. On 23 February, I chaired a meeting of UK Heads of Mission and US, French, Belgian and EU representatives in Nairobi to discuss the way forward in bringing peace to DRC. On 24 February, Britain supported the Security Council Resolution authorising a 5,500-strong observer force as the next phase of the UN mission.

Our aim now is to help all the parties implement the Lusaka Agreement; support the early deployment of the UN observer force as soon as conditions allow; get the national dialogue on the future governance of DRC under-way; and keep DRC on the international agenda.

We are already providing practical support: British officers are deployed in the region as part of the UN mission and we have made contributions of £160,000 to the Joint Military Commission and £25,000 to the national dialogue. We are ready to do more, as the parties actively demonstrate their commitment to the Lusaka Agreement.

International Criminal Court

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries have ratified the treaty establishing the International Criminal Court; and when he expects the UK to ratify the treaty. [112925]

Mr. Hain: Seven countries have ratified the Rome Statute of the International Criminal Court to date: Senegal, Trinidad and Tobago, San Marino, Italy, Fiji, Ghana and Norway. The UK will ratify as soon as the necessary primary legislation has been passed.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he plans to introduce draft legislation to enable the UK to comply with the treaty to establish an international criminal court. [112928]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Paisley, South (Mr. Alexander) on 1 December 1999, Official Report, column 258W.

Chechnya

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what monitoring of human rights in Chechnya is being undertaken by his Department; and what departmental representatives have visited Chechnya. [112696]

Mr. Vaz: We monitor a wide range of sources on the human rights situation in Chechnya, including international humanitarian and human rights organisations and the Russian and Western media. An FCO official visited Chechnya as part of an OSCE delegation in February 1995; he was subsequently seconded to the OSCE Assistance Group in Grozny from August to December 1996 and served as an election observer in the Chechen Presidential elections in January 1997. No departmental representatives have visited Chechnya since then, in view of the serious deterioration of the security situation. But our Embassy in Moscow and experts in London continue to monitor the situation closely.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent involvement his Department has had in the search for a peaceful solution to the conflict in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [112703]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers I gave on 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 416W and 6 December 1999, Official Report, column 401W.

India and Pakistan

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what factors were taken into account by his Department in the evaluation of export licence applications to (a) India and (b) Pakistan during 1998. [112700]

Mr. Hain: All export licence applications to India and Pakistan are considered on a case-by-case basis against the UK national criteria on arms sales and, since June 1998, the EU code of conduct. Following India and Pakistan's nuclear tests in May 1998, the UK introduced additional measures. These measures are set out in the statement made to the House by the then Minister of State, the hon. the Member for Manchester, Central (Mr. Lloyd), on 10 July 1998, Official Report, columns 687–88.

Diego Garcia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the agreement relating to the loan of Diego Garcia to the United States with special reference to the stocking of anti-personnel land mines. [113352]

Mr. Vaz: The 1966 Exchange of Notes between the UK and the USA concerning the availability of the British Indian Ocean Territory for defence purposes provides for the Territory to remain available to meet the defence needs of both Governments, while remaining under UK sovereignty. There are no US APM on Diego Garcia. We understand that the US stores munitions of various kinds on US warships anchored off Diego Garcia. Such vessels enjoy state immunity and are therefore outside the UK's jurisdiction and control. The US understands the importance we attach to their adherence to the Ottawa Convention as soon as possible.

Hawk Jets

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish the advice he has received on resuming the licensing of Hawk jets to (a) Indonesia and (b) Zimbabwe. [113213]

Mr. Hain: This Government have not issued any export licences for the sale of Hawk jets to either Indonesia or Zimbabwe. Such licences were, however, issued by the previous Administration.

Gibraltar (R2)

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what representations, at what level, were made to the Spanish Foreign Ministry following the diversion of the Renaissance cruise liner R2 from its intended docking in Gibraltar on 27 February; [113132]

(2) if he will make a statement on the circumstances surrounding the diversion of Renaissance cruise liner R2 scheduled to dock at Gibraltar on 27 February; [113133]

(3) when he will advise the European Commission on the circumstances surrounding the diversion of the Renaissance cruise liner R2 from its intended docking in Gibraltar; and if he will make a statement on the implications of this incident for (a) Community law compliance and (b) bilateral relations with Spain. [113131]

Mr. Vaz: The British Ambassador in Madrid raised the issue of the Renaissance Cruises liner R2 with the Spanish Ministry of Foreign Affairs and the Spanish Prime Minister's Office over the weekend. The Spanish Ambassador in London was summoned to the Foreign and Commonwealth Office on 28 February to discuss the issue. Later the same day, the Spanish Government's spokesman said that the problem relating to movements of this vessel between Gibraltar and Spanish ports had been resolved. The liner R2 docked in Gibraltar on schedule on 2 March.

The vessel in question is American-owned and Liberian-registered. We are not aware of European Community law directly relevant to the exact circumstances of this case.

East Timor

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his UN counterparts concerning the establishment of an international tribunal to try those suspected of crimes against humanity and human rights violations in East Timor. [112827]

Mr. Hain: We have held extensive discussions at the UN and elsewhere, including with the Indonesian Government and the East Timorese leaders, on how to ensure those responsible for the grave human rights violations in East Timor are brought to justice.

Sudan

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has received concerning fighting in the Heglig and Unity oil fields in Sudan. [112832]

Mr. Hain: We continue to receive troubling reports of fighting in the Upper Nile; most recently last week. Much of the fighting is factional, but there have also been attacks on Government forces.

The SPLA and other opposition forces have made clear that they see oil installations as military targets.

Peace in the Sudan remains a priority. The UK has been and will continue to be active in promoting peace in the Sudan.

Timorese Refugees

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what recent discussions he has had with the Government of Indonesia regarding the repatriation of East Timorese refugees; [112825]

(2) what representations he has received concerning UNHCR access to refugees in West Timor; and if he will make a statement. [112826]

Mr. Battle: We have received several representations about access to the refugee camps in West Timor for UNHCR and other agencies. I visited the camps myself on 19 January to see at first hand the situation on the ground. Our Ambassador and others from our Jakarta Embassy have also visited since then. Over 140,000 refugees have now returned to East Timor, but up to 100,000 remain. We are concerned that militia activity continues in the camps, but are encouraged by reports that security forces have recently been dispatched to ensure the safety of officials and aid agency representatives as they try to establish the wishes of the remaining refugees. While many of them may choose not to return, we will continue to press the Indonesian authorities to allow those who wish to return to East Timor to do so safely and securely.

HEALTH

Voluntary Organisations

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the salary on-call payments and mileage payments made to senior staff of Integrate Services while the organisation was in receipt of a section 64 grant. [104822]

Mr. Hutton: We have no plans at this time to investigate the salary on-call payments and mileage payments made to senior staff of Integrate Services while the organisation was in receipt of a grant under section 64 of the 1968 Act. Health authorities make section 64 grants to voluntary organisations out of their general allocation. Section 64 grants are subject to the rules and scrutiny processes for propriety and regularity that govern all health authority expenditure. Integrate Services is currently the subject of an inquiry by the Charity Commissioners.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to investigate the use of a section 64 grant by Integrate Services to purchase holiday facilities; and if he will make a statement. [104819]

Mr. Hutton: We have no plans at this time to investigate the purchase of holiday facilities by Integrate Services while in receipt of a grant under section 64 of the 1968 Act. Health authorities make section 64 grants to voluntary organisations out of their general allocation. Section 64 grants are subject to the rules and scrutiny processes for propriety and regularity that govern all health authority expenditure. Integrate Services is currently the subject of an inquiry by the Charity Commissioners.

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to ensure that all organisations in receipt of section 64 grants comply with the requirements of the Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998. [111821]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 1 March 2000]: The Public Interest Disclosure Act 1998 protects workers who disclose information about certain types of matters from being dismissed or penalised by their employers as a result. Section 64 grants awarded by health authorities are subject to the rules and scrutiny processes for propriety and regularity that govern all health authority expenditure. Section 64 grants awarded by Ministers to national voluntary organisations include a condition that a voluntary organisation, and anyone acting on its behalf, must comply with the law for the time being in force in the United Kingdom.

Asperger's Syndrome

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support the Government are providing for research into the causes and treatment of Asperger's Syndrome. [112690]

Mr. Hutton: The Medical Research Council (MRC)—which receives most of its income via grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry—is the main agency through which the Government support research on the causes and treatment of clinical conditions. In 1998–99 the MRC's spend on research related to autism and Asperger's Syndrome was £1.03 million. The National Research Register also contains details of work supported through the National Health Service Research and development levy or from other sources. It lists a number of Asperger's Syndrome projects currently in progress or recently completed.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what support the Government are providing to organisations catering for the needs of adult suffers of Asperger's Syndrome. [112688]

Mr. Hutton: We are currently funding a three-year project which the National Autistic Society is undertaking to identify the support and care needs of people with Asperger's Syndrome. A key objective of this work is to disseminate the findings to local authorities, other service providers and professionals. These will inform improvements and additions to local provision of services for this group.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate the Government have made of the number of sufferers of Asperger's Syndrome (a) below and (b) above the age of 18 years. [112687]

Mr. Hutton: Prevalence of Asperger's Syndrome in England is uncertain. A recent estimate provided to the Department is that it appears to affect one child in every 350. This suggests that the number of people in England with Asperger's Syndrome might be approximately 140,000.

Pensions Agency

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future status of the NHS Pensions Agency. [113419]

Mr. Milburn: A quinquennial review of the NHS Pensions Agency completed in 1998 concluded that the Agency had performed well since it was established and in particular had successfully implemented a major programme of change to improved efficiency and the quality of service to all its customers. I am placing a copy of the report in the Library today.

In the first instance I have decided to leave administration of the core NHS Superannuation Scheme within the Agency but I have committed them to outsource, under one facilities management contract, the Agency's support and ancillary services. This contract will cover at least 55 per cent. of the Agency's current running costs. I have tasked the Agency in partnership with the supplier to secure further improvements in efficiency that approach the best returns forecast by the review for full contractorisation.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Take-up (Rural Areas)

20. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the level of take-up of benefits in rural areas. [111851]

Mr. Bayley: Information on the level of take-up of benefits specifically in rural areas is not available.

Benefit Fraud

21. Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he last reviewed his target for the reduction of benefit fraud for the year 2000–01. [111852]

Mr. Rooker: As published in the Public Service Agreement, for the first time we have set a single outcome target to reduce fraud and error in the two major benefits by 30 per cent. by March 2007, with at least a 10 per cent. reduction by March 2002.

The latest results were published by the Government Statistical Service on 28 January 2000.

30. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the level of fraud within the social security system. [111862]

Mr. Rooker: We are determined to reduce the level of fraud and error in the Social Security system. We are now measuring the level of fraud and error, in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance, the two most vulnerable benefits, by thoroughly investigating a monthly random sample of cases in each Benefit Agency area. These measurements allow us, for the first time, to set targets for cutting fraud against which our progress can be judged.

32. Miss Kirkbride: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will report on progress in tackling housing benefit fraud. [111866]

Angela Eagle: I refer the hon. Member to my right hon. Friend's oral answer to the hon. Member for New Forest, East (Dr. Lewis) and the right hon. Member for Cities of London and Westminster (Mr. Brooke) today, Official Report, column 756.

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people were employed in the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service on 1 March in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000. [112789]

Mr. Rooker: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Oliver Heald, dated 3 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking how many people were employed in the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service on 1st March in (a) 1997, (b) 1998, (c) 1999 and (d) 2000.[112789]

The figures below represent the number of staff in post for the Benefit Fraud Investigation Service (BFIS) for each operational year since April 1996. Figures for specific dates are not available.

BFIS	Total
1996–97	5,000
1997–98	5,184
1998–99	5,183
1999–2000	[1]5,064

[1] Figure correct as at October 1999, end of year figures not yet available

I hope this is helpful.

Housing Benefit

22. Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the Government's policy on Housing Benefit for students. [111853]

Angela Eagle: Most full-time students are supported by the student support system which is designed to meet their needs. Full-time students in the vulnerable groups are entitled to claim Housing Benefit as are part-time students.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when his Department will issue a standard housing benefit form for those local authorities not participating in the verification framework scheme. [112155]

Angela Eagle: The Department is considering the supplementary recommendations of John Scampion's report on organised benefit fraud that a common "baseline" application form for Housing Benefit (HB) and Council Tax Benefit (CTB) should be introduced following consultation with local government and the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate.

Disabled People

24. Mr. Levitt: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to help disabled people stay in work. [111855]

Mr. Bayley: The New Deal for Disabled People pilots have already helped over 2,000 disabled people to move into or stay in employment. The Disabled Person's Tax Credit is helping to make work pay; and our recently announced improvements in the support provided by the Independent Living Funds are intended to help severely disabled people to keep a higher proportion of their income from work.

31. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on progress made with the New Deal for the Disabled. [111863]

Mr. Bayley: The New Deal for Disabled People is piloting a range of measures. The results have been very encouraging, with over 2,000 disabled clients starting work so far. We are now considering how the help provided by this New Deal might be extended in the light of the lessons emerging from the pilots.

Minimum Income Guarantee

25. Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pensioners are eligible to benefit from the minimum income guarantee; and how many have done so. [111856]

Mr. Bayley: Around 1.5 million pensioners are already receiving their Minimum Income Guarantee through income support. We must now turn our attention to 500,000 pensioners, more who may not be claiming their Minimum Income Guarantee. We will be announcing details of the national campaign shortly.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a guide to pensioners' entitlement to the minimum income guarantee; and how it can be claimed. [112555]

Mr. Bayley: The minimum income guarantee is delivered through Income Support. Details on pensioners' entitlement and how to make a claim are contained in the Income Support guide, IS20. I am a placing copy in the Library.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people aged 65 years and over are currently receiving the minimum income guarantee in (a) the Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency and (b) the City of Leeds. [112552]

Mr. Bayley: The minimum income guarantee relates to income support pensioners. The information is in the table.

Income support pensioners aged 65 and over, by parliamentary constituency—November 1999

Thousands

Leeds Central	2.9
Leeds East	2.4
Leeds North East	2.4
Leeds North West	1.6
Leeds West	2.4

Morley and Rothwell	2.1
Pudsey	2.1

Notes:
1. Sample size 5 per cent., therefore subject to sampling error.
2. Pensioners are defined as benefit units where either the claimant and/or their partner is aged 65 years or over.
3. Figures have been rounded to the nearest hundred.

Income Support

26. Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to raise the current savings thresholds for income support. [111857]

Mr. Bayley: We will bring forward our proposals later.

Lone Parents

27. Ms Blears: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the impact of Government measures since May 1997 on the level of benefit dependency among lone parents. [111858]

Angela Eagle: Lone parents are benefiting from the raft of measures introduced by this Government to help them move into work and to ensure that work pays. These include the New Deal for Lone Parents; the Lone Parent's Benefit Run-On; the Working Families Tax Credit (including the child care tax credit) the National Childcare Strategy and the National Minimum Wage.

NDLP has helped over 41,000 lone parents obtain jobs, one in three of those participating in the programme. The evaluation of the NDLP prototype phase showed that it had a small positive effect on the number of lone parents moving off Income Support.

New Pensioners (Payments)

28. Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on delays in the calculation and the making of payments to new pensioners. [111860]

Mr. Rooker: Most State Pensions are being paid to new pensioners within the normal clearance target timescales. The National Insurance Recording System computer (NIRS2) is providing the information to enable the Benefits Agency to invite people approaching pension age to claim their pension and to process the claim on receipt.

However, NIRS2 cannot provide the additional pension (SERPS) component of the pension award in all cases. The Benefits Agency has put in place contingency arrangements to make clerical calculations in these cases. Extra staff have been provided for this.

Welfare to Work

29. Ms Ward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further proposals he has to assist those moving from welfare to work. [111861]

Angela Eagle: Welfare to Work is a key priority for us. We believe in a modern welfare state which encourages and helps people to work when they can, as well as providing support for them when they cannot. We have already set in place many innovative projects, some involving the public and private sectors working in partnership, to do just that.

We have a wide range of initiatives already in place, including the New Deal for Young People and the New Deal for Lone Parents which have helped over 200,000 find employment, and the New Deal for Disabled People which is providing practical help enabling those who want to work to realise their ambitions. Two million disabled people already work and over one million more want to. From April this year, the New Deal for the Over 50s will be rolled out nationally.

In addition, the ONE Service is currently being tested in 12 pilot areas around the UK. This offers personalised advice and support through a Personal Adviser to those of working age. Participation in ONE is, at present, voluntary but, from April this year, participation in a work-focused meeting with a personal adviser will become part of the normal process for people of working age claiming benefits in the pilot areas.

These reforms link in with the wider Government agenda. Colleagues in the Treasury and the Inland Revenue are ensuring that work pays by improving in-work incomes through initiatives such as the National Minimum Wage and the Working Families Tax Credit.

Pensions

33. Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to improve the public's knowledge about pensions and saving for retirement. [111867]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) on 7 February 2000, Official Report, column 5W.

ONE Service

34. Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on progress in the implementation of the ONE service. [111868]

Angela Eagle: All 12 of the ONE pilots are successfully operating in various parts of the country. We are already helping people plan ways to become more independent. We are improving the level of service we provide by ensuring that the Benefits Agency, Employment Service, local authorities and private and voluntary sector bodies work in partnership.

Although it is too early to judge the level of success we have had in helping people move from welfare into work, the initial response from clients using the new service has been very encouraging.

State Earnings-related Pension Scheme

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what representations he has made to the Ombudsman about his inquiry into the administration of the state earnings-related pension scheme. [111854]

Mr. Rooker: With the Department's assistance, the Ombudsman has been investigating four sample complaints from individuals about the inheritance of SERPS. We look forward to receiving his report.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the process for checking the accuracy of arrears statements at the time when existing child support cases are transferred to the new system for child support. [111777]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for the Chief Executive, Mrs. Faith Boardman. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Faith Boardman to Mr. Kidney, dated 3 March 2000:

I am replying to your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the Child Support Agency.

The process of migrating data from the existing Child Support Computer System to the new system will be complex and work is being undertaken to asses show this is to be achieved. No decisions have yet been made on a preferred approach. However, the Agency is committed to performing case checks on all live cases bringing assessments up to date where appropriate prior to migration of cases to the new system.

From 30 May 2000, changes are being made to the existing Child Support Computer System to enable non-resident parents, and parents with care, to receive payment statements on a regular basis.

The statement will explain how any arrears balance has been calculated. Procedures are in place to enable cases to be corrected where inaccuracies are detected.

I hope this is helpful.

Vaccine Damage Deaths

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many awards have been made under the Vaccine Damage Payment Act 1979 in respect of children who have died following vaccination. [112624]

Mr. Bayley: The existing Vaccine Damage Payment scheme, which has been in place since 1979, provides a one-off payment to people severely disabled by vaccination against certain diseases. In three cases the vaccinated person had died by the time the payment was made, two children and one adult.

Verification Framework

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local authorities (a) have the Verification Framework in place and fully operational, (b) are implementing it at present and (c) have accepted funding and intend to implement it. [113187]

Angela Eagle: At 3 March 2000, 140 local authorities had certified that, having received set-up funds from the Department, they are fully complying with all the requirements of the Department's Verification Framework. A further 102 local authorities have either already received funds or accepted the offer of funds to implement the Verification Framework fully and are at various stages of their implementation. 242 local authorities have accepted funds to implement the Verification Framework.

Unclaimed Benefits

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of women over the age of 60 years who are not claiming the benefits to which they are entitled in the (a) constituency of Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East, (b) Teesside Region, (c) Northern Region and (d) United Kingdom. [113211]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. It is not possible to produce reliable estimates of numbers not claiming their entitlement at constituency, regional or sub-regional levels. There is no evidence that the pattern of Northern Region take-up of Income Support for women over 60 is above or below the national average; the scope for Regional estimates will be kept under review. Information on a national level is in the table.

Estimates of single female pensioners not taking up their entitlement to benefit in 1997–98

Thousand

Benefit	Females
Income Support	450,000
Council Tax Benefit	480,000
Housing Benefit	120,000

Notes:
1. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten thousand.
2. The questions were interpreted as requesting information on single males and single females.
3. Figures are based on data from the Family Resources Survey, 1997–98.
4. Figures are subject to sampling error.

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of men over the age of 65 years who are not claiming the benefits to which they are entitled in the (a) constituency of Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East, (b) Teesside Region, (c) Northern Region and (d) United Kingdom. [113210]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. It is not possible to produce reliable estimates of numbers not claiming their entitlement at constituency, regional or sub-regional levels. The scope for Regional estimates will be kept under review. Information on a national level is in the table.

Estimates of single male pensioners not taking up their entitlement to benefit in 1997–98

Thousand

Benefit	Males
Income Support	100,000
Council Tax Benefit	130,000
Housing Benefit	40,000

Notes:
1. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten thousand.
2. The question was interpreted as requesting information on single males.
3. Figures are based on data from the Family Resources Survey, 1997–98.
4. Figures are subject to sampling error.

Benefits Agency Staff (Scotland)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the current staffing levels in local Benefits Agency offices in (a) Inverclyde and (b) Scotland. [111840]

Angela Eagle: As at 25 February, the number of staff employed in Inverclyde is 179, and as at 31 January the number for Scotland was 7,215.

Pensioners (Benefit Take-up)

Mr. Randall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps he is taking to ensure that all pensioners receive the benefits to which they are entitled. [111836]

Mr. Rooker: We will be announcing details of a national campaign, to encourage pensioners to claim their minimum income guarantee, shortly.

Pensioner Incomes

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will update his estimates based on the Family Resources Survey 1996–97 of (a) median pensioner incomes, excluding means-tested benefits, by age, sex and marital status, consistent with his answer of 18 January 1999, Official Report, column 372W and (b) the size of each group. [113283]

Mr. Rooker: I refer my right hon. Friend to the written answer I gave to the hon. Member for Northavon (Mr. Webb) on 8 February 2000, Official Report, columns 128–30W.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when action will be taken to ensure that all pensioners entitled to income support receive it; and what administrative obstacles exist to backdating the resulting awards of benefit to (a) April 1999 and (b) the date when eligibility commenced. [113128]

Mr. Bayley: An announcement of our plans to encourage pensioners to take-up their entitlement to the Minimum Income Guarantee will be made shortly.

There are no administrative obstacles to backdating awards of benefit to April 1999. However, the prescribed time limit for claiming Income Support would prevent any claim made today being backdated to that date. That time limit, even with an extension for special circumstances, could result in payment for no more than three months prior to the date of claim.

Anyone who claims Income Support can be considered for entitlement from the date of his or her claim. Generally this will be the first date that they contact the department to let the Secretary of State know of their intention to claim, provided that they then complete the appropriate claim form and provide the necessary evidence within one month of that first contact. If the customer is in receipt of Retirement Pension, Income Support will be paid on the same day as that Retirement Pension. In such circumstances entitlement to Income Support will begin on the first such payday, which may be later than the date of claim.

Stakeholder Pension

Dr. Gibson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to consult insurance companies in establishing the stakeholder pension. [111845]

Mr. Rooker: Insurance companies have been actively involved in the extensive consultation undertaken for stakeholder pensions and will shortly be invited to comment on the draft regulations.

Children in Poverty

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many children were living in poverty in each of the past 10 years; and what estimate he has made of the number of children living in poverty over the next three years. [113205]

Mr. Bayley: I refer my hon. Friend to the Written Answer I gave him on 21 February 2000, Official Report, columns 790–91W.

TREASURY

Gross Domestic Product Statistics

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to publish regional GDP statistics. [112364]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 6 March 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on plans to publish regional GDP statistics. I am replying in Dr Holt's absence.

ONS last published GDP by Government Office Region (GOR), for years up to 1997, in an ONS News Release in January 1991[1]. An article with additional tables and commentary was published in the March 1999 edition of Economic Trends[2]. Sub-regional estimates of GDP up to 1996 were last published in an ONS News Release in October 1998[3].

ONS plans to publish estimates of regional GDP up to 1998 and sub-regional GDP up to 1997 in the summer of 2000.

Licence Evasion

Mr. Steinberg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the amount of money the Exchequer loses annually through non-payment of (a) television licences, (b) car tax, (c) vehicle insurance and (d) MOT certificates. [111431]

Mr. Timms: It is estimated that around £183 million is lost annually to the Exchequer through non-payment of vehicle excise duty. The loss of revenue through non-payment of MOT test certificates is estimated to be around £870,000.

To help tackle this evasion, DVLA continues to be proactive in improving enforcement regimes and last year recovered £80 million through penalties and fines.

The non-payment of vehicle insurance represents costs to insurance companies. Figures are not available on the costs to the Exchequer, though these costs are likely to be negligible.

The burden of any losses resulting from non payment of TV licence fees fall with the BBC.

Pensions (Economic and Monetary Union)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress made since the 1999 British-Italian conference on considering the effect of EMU on pension provision. [112342]

Miss Melanie Johnson: All Member States of the EU are involved in regular discussions on a range of issues, including pension provision. For example, the Cardiff peer review process ensures that each Member State is assessed on its progress on economic reform, including to pension systems, and a sub-group of the Economic Policy Committee is currently looking at the impact of ageing populations on the sustainability of Member States' public finances.

Employment (EU Membership)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of jobs that are dependent on continued UK membership of the European Union. [112504]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is estimated that up to $3\frac{1}{2}$ million jobs in the UK are linked, directly and indirectly, to the exports of goods and services to the European Union from the UK.

Mortgage Lending

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what arrangements he has to review prudential upper limits on loan-to-value ratios by mortgage lenders; what are the rules of the Treasury in setting prudential limits; if he will obtain and publish copies of the rules of the Bank of England and the Financial Services Authority relating to setting prudential limits; and when the prudential limits were last reviewed. [112516]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Financial Services Authority and the Building Societies Commission are the independent prudential supervisors of banks and building societies respectively. All their prudential notes are publicly available. In carrying out their responsibilities, the supervisors take a wide range of factors into account, which includes assessing lenders' exposure to mortgage risks, and undertake regular reviews of market practice. It is a requirement of authorisation that banks and building societies should run their operations prudently, and they should apply a minimum 50 per cent. risk weighting to assets fully secured on land.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will refer the commission and penalty charges levied by the Kensington Mortgage Company to the Financial Services Authority; [112774]

(2) what steps he is taking to improve the transparency of the conditions offered by mortgage lenders to their customers; [112773]

(3) if he will ask the Financial Services Authority to conduct an inquiry into the non-status mortgage lending sector; [112775]

(4) what recent discussions he has had with the Financial Services Authority regarding the activities of non-status mortgage lenders. [112776]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I announced on 26 January that the Treasury would give the Financial Services Authority (FSA) responsibility for regulating most residential mortgages. All mortgage lenders, including those which specialise in the non-status market, will have to be authorised by the FSA, with specific permission to lend on mortgage. All mortgage lenders will have to satisfy the FSA that they are honest, competent, trustworthy and solvent, before permission can be given. The FSA will regulate mortgage advertising and require all mortgage lending activity to include specific disclosure of the main features of the loan.

I also announced on 26 January that the Treasury would set new benchmark, CAT standard (cost, access, terms) mortgages for variable and fixed or capped interest rate mortgages. Although voluntary, these will provide a yardstick to help borrowers make better informed, confident mortgage choices and avoid products which have in some cases caused detriment in the past. It is expected that CAT standards will be finalised shortly, following discussions with the mortgage industry.

The FSA will embark on a formal consultation process in the early summer and will consult on detailed rules for mortgage regulations towards the end of the year. Unauthorised mortgage providers will need to apply to the FSA by the middle of 2001, and the FSA expects to have the new regime in place by the third quarter of next year. The Treasury is in frequent contact with the FSA to discuss how these matters are progressing. However, it will be for the FSA to decide whether to initiate investigations into particular areas or firms in the mortgage market, once it has the powers to do so.

In the meantime, all mortgage lenders in the non-status market have to comply with the guidelines issued by the Director General of Fair Trading in November 1997. These guidelines include the need for transparency in all dealings with potential and actual borrowers, and to ensure they do not engage in unfair business practices. Failure to comply with the guidelines could call into question a firm's fitness to hold a consumer credit licence.

Disposable Incomes

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the equivalised net disposable incomes, using conventional assumptions of (a) a dual-earner couple with two children under 11, both earning the minimum wage, where one works full-time and the other 16 hours a week, (b) a single-earner couple with two children aged under 11 earning the national minimum wage where one works (i) full-time and (ii) 16 hours a week and (c) a single parent with two children aged under 11 earning the minimum wage and working (i) full-time and (ii) 16 hours a week. [112503]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is contained in the table:

Equivalised net disposable income

£ per week

Family type	Two children aged 1 and 2	Two children aged 3 and 5
Dual earner couple—one working full-time[1], one part-time	201.14	183.78
Single earner couple—one working full-time[1]	180.73	165.13
Single earner couple—one working part-time	136.69	124.89
Lone parent—working full-time[1]	260.83	229.53
Lone parent—working part-time	197.27	173.60

[1] full-time assumed to be at 35 hours per week

Notes:

1. Net disposable income is defined as earnings net of Income Tax and National Insurance and includes child benefit and entitlement to WFTC, it does not include entitlement to Housing and Council Tax Benefit.

2. Income has been equivalised using the before housing costs McClements scale.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112671]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government are committed to keeping the number of NDPBs to a minimum, and to ensuring that those which remain are open, accountable and effective.

The annual Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions list bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

Since the 1999 edition was published, the Statistics Advisory Committee was disbanded on 4 May 1999. The Statistics Commission will come into being on 1 April 2000.

The Policyholders Protection Board and the Financial Services Tribunal will be disbanded, subject to enactment of the Financial Services and Markets Bill now before Parliament. The Bill provides for the creation of a Financial Services and Markets Tribunal under the Lord Chancellor's Department, and a Financial Services and Markets Compensation Scheme.

Self-assessment

Mr. Woolas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will introduce a rolling deadline for individuals for the submission of self-assessment tax forms. [112613]

Dawn Primarolo: There are no current plans to introduce a rolling deadline for self-assessment taxpayers.

Local Taxation

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate for the last 20 years the total revenue yield from local domestic taxation (a) in cash terms and (b) as a share of national income distinguishing between those periods when the revenue base was (i) domestic rating, (ii) community charge and (iii) council tax. [112515]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Kidgell to Dr Vincent Cable, dated 6 March 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your parliamentary question on local domestic taxation. I am replying in Dr Holt's absence.

Table A shows local government receipts (£ million) from domestic taxation. Since 1989 there have been regional differences in the types of local taxation, so the table shows a split of the receipts into domestic rates, community charge and council tax. Table B repeats this presentation, but shows receipts as a percentage of gross national income.

EU Fines

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the total number of fines (a) owed and (b) paid under Article 228(2) by each EU member state; and how much debt in respect of such fines, broken down by country, has been written off. [112505]

Mr. Vaz: I have been asked to reply.

There have not yet been any fines imposed under Article 228(2) of the Treaty of Amsterdam, nor were there any fines imposed under ex Article 171.

Drug Smuggling

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many people were charged with drug smuggling offences in the UK during 1999. [112804]

Dawn Primarolo: 2,271 persons.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) men and (b) women were (i) charged, (ii) convicted and (iii) imprisoned for drug smuggling offences in the UK during 1999. [113083]

Dawn Primarolo: In 1999, 1,813 men and 458 women were charged by Customs and Excise for drug smuggling offences. 1,072 people were convicted and 941 sentenced to imprisonment. A breakdown by gender of those convicted and sentence is not held centrally. The figures for convictions and sentences do not necessarily relate to the same cases as those for charges.

Pay Awards

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to (a) compensate local authorities for national pay awards above inflation and (b) make an appropriate contribution to the block grant for (i) Scotland, (ii) Wales and (iii) Northern Ireland, to cover them. [112919]

Mr. Andrew Smith: In the Comprehensive Spending Review we provided support to local government which took account of pay pressures. Consequential amounts were allocated to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland. The Government have made it clear that all pay awards will need to be paid from within the spending limits set in the Comprehensive Spending Review. We do not expect to give additional support in the light of national pay awards.

Insurance Records

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the numbers of people of working age with (a) no insurance records and (b) incomplete insurance records for each year of the past 30 years; and if he will express these data as a proportion of the working population. [112159]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 March 2000]: A full answer could only be provided at disproportionate cost. However the following information is available:

The numbers of people with qualifying years for retirement pension in Great Britain for the 18 financial years between 1978–79 and 1995–96 can be found in table 5 of "Contributions and Qualifying Years for Retirement Pension 1995–96—Volume 2", a copy of which is in the Library of the House.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if any small business will be exempt from delivering the working families tax credit through the pay packet. [112757]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 March 2000]: Paying WFTC through the pay packet is central to demonstrating the rewards of work and making work pay for families on low incomes. From April employees awarded tax credits will generally receive them with their pay except where they have opted for the credit to be paid to their spouse or partner or where their employer does not operate a PAYE scheme or only operates a simplified PAYE scheme for domestic staff. The Inland Revenue is providing an extensive range of direct practical help and support for employers who will be paying tax credits through the pay packet.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the number of recipients of the Working Families Tax Credit who currently receive payment at a post office who will from April 2000 receive payment through the wage packet. [112791]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 March 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave my hon. Friend the Member for Stafford (Mr. Kidney) on 9 February 2000, Official Report, column 214W.

Households (Full-time Workers)

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each of the last 30 years the numbers of households headed by a full-time worker (a) with children and (b) without children. [112163]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 2 March 2000]: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Frank Field, dated 6 March 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your parliamentary question about the number of households headed by a full-time worker. I am replying in Dr Holt's absence.

In August 1998 the ONS introduced Labour Force Survey (LFS) databases especially designed for analyses of labour market data on households. Estimates form the LFS using these databases giving the number of households headed by a full-time employee or self-employed person with children and without children are given in the attached table. However, the household datasets are only available for 1990 and from 1992 onwards.

The analyses have been restricted to working-age households, which are defined as households including at least one person of working age, i.e. a man aged 16 to 64 and a woman aged 16 to 59.

IR35

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many individuals he calculates will be affected by the introduction of IR35. [112990]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 March 2000]: This information is provided in the Regulatory Impact Assessment on the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill published in October 1999.

Mortality Statistics

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the average death rates allowing for age and sex standardisation for (a) all causes, (b) coronary heart disease, (c) stroke and (d) cancer for each ward in Leeds, Central parliamentary constituency and for the City of Leeds as a whole. [112551]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Hilary Benn, dated 6 March 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent question on death rates in Leeds. I am replying in Dr. Holt's absence.

The attached table shows indirectly standardised mortality ratios (SMRs) for all causes of death, coronary heart disease, stroke and cancer, for each ward (as constituted at the time of the 1991 Census) that lies wholly in Leeds Central parliamentary constituency, in the years 1991–1993, based on populations from the 1991 Census. Comparable figures are also provided for Leeds metropolitan county district (based on 1991 boundaries).

We have provided indirectly standardised ratios rather than European standardised rates as the latter do not incorporate sex standardisation and are likely to be less accurate for small numbers of deaths by cause in each ward.

An SMR is defined as the ratio of the observed deaths in a given population over the expected deaths in that population if it experienced the age-specific death rates of a standard population (in this case the United Kingdom). The SMR for the UK is 100. Values greater than 100 indicate higher than average mortality and values lower than 100 indicate lower than average mortality.

Emergency Vehicles (Fuel Tax)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will review the level of tax paid on fuel by the emergency services for running their vehicles. [113184]

Dawn Primarolo: There are no plans to review the level of tax paid on fuel by the emergency services for running their vehicles.

Departmental Secondment

Mr. Willis: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many staff were seconded from the private sector to his Department in (a) May 1997 to April 1998, (b) May 1998 to April 1999 and (c) May 1999 to the latest date for which figures are available, stating in each case the companies from which staff have been seconded. [109291]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 9 February 2000]: During the respective periods, the number of staff seconded from the private sector were as follows:

(a) 18

(b) 20

(c) 18.

Regional Economic Conference

Mr. Peter Atkinson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry over the staging of a regional economic conference for the North. [112921]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 3 March 2000]: The Chancellor of the Exchequer and the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry discuss a wide range of issues on a regular basis.

Cashpoint Machines

Dr. Cable: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what powers he has (a) to stop and (b) to regulate the application of charges for the use of ATM cash points in the LINK system. [113182]

Miss Melanie Johnson: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by my hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 1 March 2000, Official Report, column 416W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Burnley (Mr. Pike).

Mozambique

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent debt write-off arrangements have been agreed with the Government of Mozambique that cover payments to countries which are in receipt of IMF assistance. [112927]

Miss Melanie Johnson: As my hon. Friend will be aware, at the Chancellor's initiative, the UK will relieve 100 per cent. of Mozambique's outstanding bilateral official debt and will receive no further debt payments from that country.

In July 1999, as part of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries debt initiative, bilateral official creditors in the Paris Club agreed to 90 per cent. debt reduction for Mozambique. Two of these creditors are in receipt of IMF assistance. The Government are not a party to the negotiations of other bilateral official creditors which have been encouraged to offer similar levels of debt reduction.

International Monetary Fund

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning the selection of a new managing director of the IMF; and if he will make a statement. [112828]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The usual informal consultations are now under way to appoint a new managing director of the IMF. We expect the Executive Board to reach a formal decision in due course.

European Bank for Reconstruction and Development

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what recent representations he has received regarding loans by the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development to the west/east joint venture company, KomiArcticOil; and if he will make a statement; [112427]

(2) what recent assessment he has made of lending by the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development to Russian oil companies and its compatibility with its rules on lending. [112426]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The European Bank for Reconstruction and Development seeks to engage in high quality projects with a strong transition impact. This approach is fully in line with the Bank's mandate and lending policies. All loans are subject to a rigorous review process within the Bank and must be approved by the Bank's Board of Directors, which represents 60 member nations and international organisations, including the UK.

In terms of decisions relating to a change in ownership in a company in which the EBRD has an interest, the Bank reaches its decision based on commercial considerations with proper regard to the integrity and corporate governance standards of the purchaser.

CABINET OFFICE

Information Technology

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to oversee the introduction of major Government IT projects into Government Departments. [112615]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Cabinet Office is leading a review of the Government's handling of IT projects to identify the pillars that support successful projects to make sure that these are in place from the start in the future.

The first recommendations from this review were announced to the House on 21 February 2000, Official Report, columns 739–40W. These include ways to improve Ministers' awareness of their role in major IT projects and the establishment of a new system to share knowledge about IT projects across Government, so that all Departments have the benefit of the best practice available. These recommendations demonstrate that the Government are committed to taking action to improve performance in the introduction of major IT projects. Further measures to address other aspects of the handling of IT projects will be put forward in due course.

Responsibility for the implementation of the recommendations will be shared between the Centre and Departments, although individual projects remain the responsibility of the Accounting Officer of the relevant Department.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will list the new public bodies established by her Department since May 1997. [112673]

Mr. Stringer: The annual Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions lists public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

Departmental Staff (South-West)

Mr. Bradshaw: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many staff are employed by each Government department and agency in (a) the South-West, (b) Devon and (c) Exeter. [113209]

Mr. Stringer: The number of staff employed in Government Departments and agencies in the South-West, Devon and Exeter is listed in the table. Figures are quoted on a Full-Time Equivalent basis.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the new public bodies established by her Department since May 1997. [112657]

Clare Short: My Department has established one new public body since May 1997. It is an Advisory Body called the Development Awareness Working Group.

Women's Radio

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list radio projects funded by her Department which aim to disseminate information for women. [112830]

Clare Short: We actively support a range of radio projects that are specifically designed to disseminate development information to women, or which contain women focused information within a more general media for development initiative. Some current examples of such include:

BBC World Service Great Lakes Lifeline Service—Rwanda, Burundi, Democratic Republic of Congo—features programmes on women and a soap opera produced by Health Unlimited addressing women's health issues.

Soul City Multimedia (TV, radio and press) project—South Africa/Southern Africa Region—support information on violence against women, rape and HIV/AIDS. Developed in conjunction with the strengthening of the National Network on Violence Against Women.

Others include: Radio Gulu in Northern Uganda; Search for Common Ground radio soap opera in Angola; BBC Education Children in Conflict Radio Service; Project SPEAR emergency radio broadcasting for Macedonia, Albania and Kosovo; Farm Broadcast Unit in Bangladesh, BBC Radio Education for Afghan Children in Afghanistan.

Storm Warnings (Indian Ocean)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what reports she has received on the operation of the early warning system for cyclones and tropical storms in the Indian Ocean area; and if she will make a statement. [112698]

Clare Short: The region is serviced by the French Government's Regional Forecasting Centre for Tropical Cyclones based on Reunion Island, east of Madagascar. We also receive regular bulletins on all potentially serious weather situations from the UK Meteorological Office. My officials in London and Mozambique use other monitoring resources available on the World Wide Web including the World Meteorological Organisation and the South African Weather Bureau.

Disasters (Telephone Lines)

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make it her policy to establish a single number disaster telephone line for public responses to events such as the floods in Southern Africa; and if she will make a statement. [112744]

Clare Short: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 20 April 1999, Official Report, column 471W.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Farm Bankruptcies

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farming businesses have (a) closed and (b) gone bankrupt during each of the past five years. [110529]

Ms Quin: There are no statistics on farm business closures. The data requested on bankruptcies are set out in the table.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 25 January, Official Report, column 189W, on live animal exports, how many live sheep were exported from the UK in 1999 for breeding. [110810]

Ms Quin: A total of 2,673 live sheep for breeding were exported from the UK in 1999 to EU member states and to Third Countries.

These figures are derived from the computer system used to issue export health certificates and are subject to updating and amendment.

Mr. Prosser: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many live pigs were exported from the UK in 1999 for (a) slaughter, (b) further fattening and (c) breeding in 1999, broken down by each country of destination. [110811]

Ms Quin: The total number of live pigs exported from the UK during 1999 for (a) slaughter, (b) further fattening and (c) breeding are shown in the following tables:

Bees

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what scientific studies he has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated regarding the import of bees from New Zealand; what assessment he has made of the probability of such an importation carrying Kashmir Bee virus into the United Kingdom; and what advice he has received concerning the role of varroa mites as vectors for KBV. [110125]

Ms Quin: The Central Science Laboratory's National Bee Unit was requested to undertake a formal qualitative risk analysis on the importation of package bees from New Zealand. This was completed in March 1999. The importation of queen bees from that country which has high bee health standards, has been allowed under licence since 1980 without problem. Germany also allows imports of bee packages from New Zealand. However, the risk of importing Kashmir Bee virus (KBV) cannot be ruled out and the virus may already be present in UK bees. It has not yet been proven that KBV is vectored by varroa. There is certainly no indication from those major honey-producing countries where both varroa and KBV are endemic that the virus is causing concern, or measurable damage, to industry.

BSE (France)

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the European Commission about the increased incidence of BSE and CJD in France. [109851]

Ms Quin [holding answer 14 February 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for South Suffolk (Mr. Yeo) on 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 969W.

Flood Defence

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what powers flood defence committees have in respect of the exercise by the Environment Agency of its permissive powers. [111586]

Mr. Morley: Section 106 of the Water Resources Act 1991 sets down the relationship between the Environment Agency and flood defence committees. Section 106(1) requires the Agency to arrange for its flood defence functions (except certain financial functions specified in section 106(2)) to be carried out by Regional Flood Defence Committees.

In practice the committees will decide a forward programme of flood defence works based on Environment Agency proposals. The committees also provide the majority of funding for flood defence, through the levies on constituent councils.

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the Environment Agency has discretionary use of permissive powers under present legislation affecting the Environment Agency flood defence supervisory duty. [111585]

Mr. Morley: Flood and coastal defence legislation is permissive, empowering the Environment Agency (and the other operating authorities) to carry out works but not requiring them to undertake such works, either at all or to a given standard. The Government nevertheless expect operating authorities to exercise their powers, and respond to flood risks, in a responsible way, and to be ready to explain their policy in this regard.

We have provided operating authorities with guidance to allow them to take prioritised decisions on flood defence provision within a strategic framework. This has been further developed through the Government's High Level Targets for flood and coastal defence, published in November 1999, which include a requirement for all operating authorities to prepare a publicly available policy statement setting out their approach to flood and coastal defence.

The Environment Agency has a duty, under section 6(4) of the Environment Act 1995, to exercise a general supervision over all matters relating to flood defence in England and Wales. The way in which this duty will be exercised acknowledging other operating authorities' responsibilities was elaborated, alongside the High Level Targets, in November 1999.

Farm Subsidies (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many farmers in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire received subsidy payments in each £10,000 band in each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement; [111410]

(2) if he will provide a breakdown of the subsidy payments to farmers in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire for each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [111441]

Ms Quin: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Glufosinate Ammonia

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2000, Official Report, column 289W, if the use of glufosinate ammonia and its effects on the environment is being monitored as part of the trials being undertaken on GM winter oil seed rape. [111364]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 February 2000]: Yes.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps would have to be taken to lift the prohibition on winter use of glufosinate ammonia; and in what circumstances the lifting of the ban would be considered. [111354]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 February 2000]: The prohibition is contained in the five approvals for the commercial use of glufosinate ammonium products on oil seed rape. Lifting the prohibition would only be considered if an application, accompanied by information to demonstrate that this particular use posed no unacceptable risk to people, wildlife or the wider environment, were received. Experimental approvals, allowing strictly limited use but no sales, may be granted in order for experimental information to be collected to support such an application.

Agriculture (Somerset)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many people were employed in agriculture in Somerset in each year from 1984–85 to 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111963]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 February 2000]: People employed on main agricultural holdings in Somerset for the years 1984–85 to 1999–2000 are as follows:

	Employees	Total labour
1984	7,081	15,373
1985	7,187	15,436
1986	6,924	15,241
1987	6,808	15,229
1988	6,970	15,398
1989	6,579	15,056
1990	6,604	14,863
1991	6,501	14,605
1992	6,385	14,503
1993	6,491	14,611
1994	5,984	14,282
1995	5,879	13,866
1996	5,696	13,715
1997	5,724	13,695
1998	5,764	13,841
1999	5,277	13,197

Notes:
1. Employees consists of salaried managers, regular workers and seasonal/casual workers.
2. Total labour consists of employees and principal farmers, spouses, other farmers, partners and directors.
3. In 1998, fundamental changes were introduced to the labour questions on the June Agricultural and Horticultural Census in England, Wales and Scotland. It appears that this change in questions may have led to the recording of additional Labour who were not previously included in the returns. The change in questions has also led to a redistribution of labour between the various categories, most notably for salaried managers.
4. We therefore advise caution when comparing the 1998 results with previous years.

Milk

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are his latest estimates for the price paid to farmers, in (a) pence and (b) euros per litre for milk in (i) the UK and (ii) in each of the EU member states which has a milk sector. [111788]

Ms Quin: 1998 is the latest year for which farm-gate milk prices are available for all member states. The table shows the annual average price paid to farmers in 1998 for milk in each EU member state for raw milk, based on a milk fat content of 3.7 per cent. to ensure comparability. 1997 prices have been shown for comparison.

Feeding Stuffs Regulations

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what recent representations he has received concerning the impact of proposed Regulation 13 of the Draft Feeding Stuffs Regulations 2000 on animal husbandry in the hill and upland areas of the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement; [112066]

(2) if he will amend Regulation 13 of the Draft Feeding Stuffs Regulation 2000 to allow the continued use for animal husbandry in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland of cobalt, selenium, copper and other trace minerals. [112065]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 February 2000]: My Department has received a large number of representations concerned with the effect of the proposed regulation including on hill and upland areas of the United Kingdom.

Our recent consultation on the draft Feeding Stuffs Regulations 2000 specifically requested comments on this regulation. This was in order that all the implications of such a measure on additives in animal husbandry used outside feeds could be assessed. We will be in a position to make a decision on this issue shortly, when we have considered all the responses.

Agrimonetary Compensation

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much agrimonetary compensation has been received by British farmers in the last three years for which figures are available; and if he will make a statement. [111783]

Ms Quin: The approximate figures are set out for the following CAP scheme years.

£ million

Scheme Year
1997	85
1998	48
1999	264

Because payments relate to scheme years, some of the expenditure falls between calendar years.

Fish Discards

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the research study on discards commissioned from Nautilus Consultants will be completed. [112345]

Mr. Morley: The study commenced in June 1999 and will take 18 months to complete. The final report is expected in December this year.

Pig Industry

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) how many times he has raised the issue of BSE-related costs to the pig industry with the Agriculture Commissioner in Brussels in the last 12 months; [111704]

(2) when he last raised the issue of BSE-related costs to the pig industry with the Farm Commissioner in Brussels. [111705]

Ms Quin: Ministers and officials have had a number of discussions with the European Commission in the last 12 months on the current difficulties being faced by UK pig producers. My right hon. Friend's most recent discussions with Agriculture Commissioner Fischler were in the margins of the Agriculture Council on Monday 24 January and at the National Farmers Union Annual General Meeting on 1 February.

Greyhounds

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent research his Department has conducted into the welfare standards for racing greyhounds raised in the UK in Vietnam; and if he will make a statement. [112389]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 1 March 2000]: No such studies have been undertaken by this Department. We have no powers in relation to the matter raised.

Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the members of SEAC, indicating which (a) are and (b) have been involved in the production of vaccines, and listing their declared commercial interests. [111899]

Ms Quin [holding answer 1 March 2000]: In accordance with the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee's code of practice, members are asked to declare any commercial and non-commercial interests. The table lists the members of SEAC and their currently declared interests. This information is also published in the Committee's Annual Report.

Correspondence

Mr. Baldry: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when he will reply to the letter from the hon. Member for Banbury dated 23 December concerning Mr. C. Lane of Village Farm, Bletchingdon. [112654]

Ms Quin: I replied to the letter from the hon. Member for Banbury on 2 March 2000.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Christopher Snelling

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on what grounds he authorised the early release of Christopher Snelling, the murderer of Police Sergeant Robertson; and if he will make a statement. [111786]

Mr. Boateng: Christopher Snelling was sentenced to 12 years imprisonment for conspiracy to rob and the manslaughter of Police Sergeant Robertson. No decision as to his release has yet been taken.

His application for release on parole is currently being considered by the Parole Board, pursuant to the authority delegated to it under the Parole Board (Transfer of Functions) Order 1998. I have asked the Chairman of the Parole Board to write to the hon. Member directly once the Board has concluded its deliberations, setting out its decision.

When considering a case such as Mr. Snelling's, the Parole Board takes into account Directions as to the release of determinate sentence prisoners given by the Secretary of State, under section 32(6) of the Criminal Justice Act 1991. These focus primarily on the risk to the public of a further offence being committed at a time when the offender would otherwise be in prison. This is balanced against the benefit, both to the public and the offender, of early release back into the community under a degree of supervision which might help rehabilitation and so lessen the risk of reoffending in the future.

European Public Prosecutor

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which EU member states currently support the establishment of a European public prosecutor; and what is the position of the Commission on this matter. [112339]

Mr. Charles Clarke: In its Opinion for this year's Intergovernmental Conference, the Commission proposes the creation of a European Public Prosecutor to investigate and prosecute before national courts cases of fraud against the European Community's budget. I have made clear that I am not persuaded of the case for a European prosecutor and see a number of significant difficulties in such a proposal. To date, I am not aware that other member states have publicly declared positions.

Europol

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the cost in the next financial year of the increase in remuneration, pensions and other financial entitlements to Europol employees of December 1999. [112509]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Total personnel costs, including salaries, pensions and other staff allowances, in the Europol budget for 2000 is 17,261,000 euro in respect of 185 posts. These figures compare with a personnel budget for 1999 of 11,130,500 euro for 139 staff. A copy of Europol's draft budget for 2000 (reference 2210–87r6) giving a detailed breakdown of costs was deposited with the Parliamentary scrutiny committees on 20 September 1999.

Asylum Seekers

Dr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what powers his Department (a) has and (b) will have after 1 April compulsorily to acquire local government properties used to house asylum seekers, (i) if it needs further such accommodation for such purposes and (ii) if it needs such accommodation on a longer basis than the local authority plans to use it for such purposes. [112477]

Mrs. Roche: Section 101 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 (which comes into force on 3 April) provides that the Secretary of State may by order designate areas in England and Wales, Scotland or Northern Ireland as reception zones. The Secretary of State may direct a local authority of the Northern Ireland Executive to make available any suitable housing accommodation within such a zone for the purpose of providing support to asylum seekers under section 95 of the 1999 Act. The period for which such accommodation is to be made available cannot exceed five years.

In relation to Scotland, the Secretary of State may not direct a local authority to provide accommodation unless Scottish ministers have confirmed that the criteria specified in a designation order are in their opinion met in relation to that authority.

Housing accommodation will be suitable for the purposes of the provisions of section 101 if it is unoccupied, likely to remain unoccupied for the foreseeable future if not made available, and appropriate for the accommodation of asylum seekers.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will list those local authorities which are currently supporting asylum seekers who are unaccompanied minors, indicating how many such people are being supported by each such local authority; [113318]

(2) if he will list those local authorities which are currently supporting asylum seekers, indicating how many asylum seekers are being supported by each such local authority. [113316]

Mrs. Roche: Information on local authority-supported asylum seekers is available only for the Greater London local authorities. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hammersmith and Fulham (Mr. Coleman) on 9 February 2000, Official Report, columns 166–67W, which gives the available information, as at 7 January 2000, on asylum seekers supported by each London borough, split between families, singles and unaccompanied minors.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what changes he has made since 2 May 1997 to the list of countries where, in terms of section 1 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996, there is in general no serious risk of persecution; [113322]

(2) which countries are designated by him under section 1 of the Asylum and Immigration Act 1996 as ones where there is in general no serious risk of persecutiog; what plans he has to amend that list; and if he will make a statement. [113321]

Mrs. Roche: The countries designated as ones where there is in general no serious risk of persecution are Bulgaria, Cyprus, Ghana, India, Pakistan, Poland and Romania. No changes have been made to this list since 2 May 1997.

When Part IV and Schedule 4 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 are brought into force later this year, the list of designated countries will cease to operate. Cases from these countries will then be dealt with, where appropriate, using the fairer and more effective case-specific procedures in the 1999 Act for dealing quickly with unfounded claims.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason payments to Scottish local authorities for supporting asylum seekers differ from such payments to English and Welsh local authorities. [113319]

Mrs. Roche: In England and Wales, local authorities may recover costs associated with supporting asylum seekers subject to unit cost limits of £140 a week for single adults and £240 a week for families. These unit costs have been agreed with the Local Government Association and the Association of London Government.

In Scotland, asylum seeking adults are supported under the Social Work (Scotland) Act 1968 and families and children under the Children (Scotland) Act 1995. The Home Office and the Scotland Office agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities, for the 1999–2000 financial year, to continue previous arrangements under which a flat rate grant of £165 per person is paid for support of asylum seeking adults and families. In future, there will be United Kingdom arrangements for asylum support under the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his Department's investigation into allegations of the misuse of public money to house asylum seekers in Northamptonshire. [113355]

Mrs. Roche: I understand that Northamptonshire County Council is currently conducting an investigation into these allegations to determine whether there are matters that should be referred to the police for possible criminal investigation. It would be inappropriate for me to comment further at this stage.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations which have agreed with his Department to provide first contact support for asylum seekers on or after 1 April. [113314]

Mrs. Roche: The following organisations have agreed to provide staff to act as reception assistants to help deal with persons seeking support under the national asylum support scheme. Refugee Arrivals Project; Migrant helpline; Refugee Council; Scottish Refugee Council; Welsh Refugee Council; and Refugee Action.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to apply the new support scheme under Part VI of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 to all asylum seekers whose applications are made on or after 1 April; and if he will make a statement. [113320]

Mrs. Roche: I propose to bring in the new support arrangements on Monday 3 April 2000 for asylum seekers who make their applications at a port of entry from that date. The entitlement of new port applicants to cash, social security and housing benefits will thereupon cease; in-country applicants do not have this entitlement.

Those who apply for asylum from that date and who are then detained at Oakington reception centre, whether their application is port or in-country, will go on to the new support arrangements.

I shall also make arrangements for asylum seekers who claim asylum and support from 3 April in Scotland or Northern Ireland and who are eligible for support to come on to the new support arrangements.

It is my intention to bring the new support arrangements on stream as soon as possible for other asylum seekers who make in-country applications for asylum in England and Wales and for those in England and Wales who claim asylum at their port of entry prior to 3 April 2000 who receive a negative decision and who then go on to appeal. Until then, responsibility for providing support will continue under the terms of Schedule 9 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy in publishing asylum statistics to differentiate between claimants from different parts of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement. [113317]

Mrs. Roche: Asylum statistics are recorded on a nationality basis and Serbs, Kosovans and Montenegrins are nationals of the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia. To attempt to provide statistics on a regional basis would incur a great deal of effort and disproportionate cost.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations which have agreed with his Department to provide accommodation for asylum seekers on or after 1 April under the provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, indicating how many asylum seekers each contractor has agreed to accommodate. [113315]

Mrs. Roche: All information about the organisations that have tendered to provide accommodation for asylum seekers under the national asylum support scheme and about the details of their bids is commercially confidential. I am, therefore, unable to provide the information requested.

Prison Staff (Assaults)

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many assaults on prison staff were carried out in the latest year for which figures are available by prisoners in (a) PFI prisons and (b) non-PFI prisons; and if he will make a statement. [112497]

Mr. Boateng: Provisional information on the number of proven assaults adjudicated upon in prisons in England and Wales during 1999 is given in the table.

Proven adjudications on assaults in prisons in England and Wales, 1999 [1]

Prisoner Welfare

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the welfare of prisoners who are held in (a) PFI-prisons and (b) non-PFI-prisons; and if he will make a statement. [112476]

Mr. Boateng: The welfare of all prisoners, including those housed in the five Private Finance Initiative Design, Construct, Manage and Finance (DCMF) prisons now open, is assessed according to the same procedures and standards. Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Prisons conducted 21 full inspections in 1999 including three DCMF prisons, Parc, Altcourse and Lowdham Grange. Conditions for prisoners in directly managed prisons were reported to range from the unacceptable to the excellent. In his report on Parc, the Chief Inspector stated that Parc was a challenging place and that there was still much to do but that he was impressed with the potential and the obvious willingness of most staff to make the prison successful. The reports on Altcourse and Lowdham Grange prisons have not yet been published.

The Prison Service itself continuously monitors the performance of all prisons including the treatment of inmates through various procedures such as Key Performance Indicators and standards audits.

Immigration and Asylum (Computer Systems)

Sir Nicholas Lyell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the functioning of his Department's computer systems relating to control of immigration and asylum. [112479]

Mrs. Roche: The Home Office relies on a number of computer systems in the control of immigration and asylum. All systems are functioning effectively under appropriate management arrangements and contracts with suppliers to provide for day to day operation and development where required.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about his plans to monitor the use of mobile telephones for criminal purposes. [112501]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill was introduced to the House on 9 February. The Bill will ensure that the current regime for intercepting the communications of those involved in serious crime is updated, to deal with the technological changes which have taken place since the Interception of Communications Act was enacted in 1985. The strict criteria for the approval of interceptions will remain the same.

Schengen Convention

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library a copy of the general principles governing the payment of informers as part of the Schengen process; and what guidelines have subsequently been passed to UK agencies. [112507]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The United Kingdom's application to participate in those parts of the Schengen acquis relating to police and judicial co-operation included a list of relevant Decisions of the Schengen Executive Committee. These include one relating to the payment of informers (SCH/Com-ex(99)8 rev 2). As the United Kingdom's application has yet to be approved, no action has yet been taken in relation to this Decision.

The United Kingdom's application has been subject to the Parliamentary scrutiny process. Accordingly those Decisions of the Schengen Executive Committee in which the United Kingdom is seeking to participate have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those items of information to be shared by the UK on accession to elements of the Schengen system. [112512]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The United Kingdom is seeking to participate in the exchange of data under Article 95 and Articles 97 to 100 of the Schengen Convention. These Articles broadly cover areas of police and judicial co-operation. A copy of the Schengen Convention may be found in the Library.

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place the Schengen Manual on Bogus Drug Deals in the Library. [112506]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I am unaware of any such Manual. If the hon. Member were able to provide more details we would be happy to explore the matter further.

Immigration and Nationality Directorate

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many staff were employed in the Immigration and Nationality Directorate on 1 February. [112620]

Mrs. Roche: The current publicity surrounding the rise in asylum seekers and the backlogs of work in Immigration and Nationality Directorate (IND) has provided a flurry of Parliamentary Questions relating to the number of staff employed in IND at various times.

There is no particular significance to the date of 1 February 2000.

Immigration Documents

Mr. Gerrard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance he has issued to immigration officers at ports regarding the issue of SAL1 and SAL2 documents; and if he will place a copy of the guidance in the Library. [112707]

Mrs. Roche: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has issued no guidance on these matters to Immigration Officers. These are administrative procedures covered by internal operational instructions.

Safe Cells

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many safe cells there are in (a) prisons and (b) police stations; what plans he has for further ones to be installed; and if he will make a statement. [112975]

Mr. Boateng: By 31 March 2000, 185 improved standard cells (previously known as "safe" cells) will have been provided in 19 existing prisons. In addition, there are 1,088 cells in use at two new privately managed prisons (Forest Bank prison and Ashfield young offenders institution) which reflect the new design requirements. All future new prisons will similarly incorporate these requirements. No central record exists of the number of such cells in police stations in England and Wales and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if the same safe cell specification applies to (a) prisons in HM Prison Service, (b) privately-run prisons and (c) prisons funded by the Private Finance Initiative; and if he will make a statement. [112976]

Mr. Boateng: Private sector consortiums seeking to build and manage new prisons are required to reflect the design requirements of the Prison Service's improved standard cell in all new prison cells. While such cells may not be identical to those built by the Prison Service, all cells will incorporate the key elements of the Service's design specification.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners committed suicide in safe cells in the last year for which figures are available. [112974]

Mr. Boateng: None of the prisoners who committed suicide in 1999 were located in the improved cell design, formerly known as "safe" cells.

Prisoner Complaints

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints of racist behaviour were made by prisoners against prison officers in 1997, 1998 and 1999. [113012]

Mr. Boateng: The number of alleged racist incidents recorded by establishments against staff on prisoners for the past three years are:

An incident may have been reported by the prisoner or by anyone else witnessing it.

All incidents which are alleged to have a racist element are required to be reported to the race relations liaison officer (RRLO) for recording and investigation. The majority of alleged racist incidents are resolved informally. Race relations and the role of the RRLO were given added prominence following the setting up of the Director General's Race Relations Group in July 1998 and further guidance on the definition of a racist incident has been issued since the publication of the Macpherson report in February 1999.

Race Relations Training

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what anti-racist training has been provided to the dedicated search team at HMP Full Sutton. [113009]

Mr. Boateng: All dedicated search team staff at Full Sutton receive training on race relations. In addition, the dedicated search team also receives training on equal opportunities and anti-bullying, both of which incorporate an element of race relations.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what anti-racist training is provided to Prison Service staff. [113013]

Mr. Boateng: All Prison Service staff are trained nationally, by the Prison Service's training services, and locally by each race relations trainer who must have attended the national race relations training for trainers course. All race relations training, and associated procedures, are auditable by the national standards unit and are underpinned by the Prison Service Order on Race Relations (PSO 2800), issued in May 1997, a copy of which is available in the Library. Topics covered in the training include:

Acceptable/unacceptable terminology; prejudice, discrimination and related processes;

the definition and investigation of complaints and racist incidents;

the significance of religious artefacts/objects; and the importance of the individual in the elimination of discrimination and the promotion of equality.

Prisoner Telephone Call Monitoring

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidelines are provided to prison officers on the recording of monitored telephone conversations of prisoners; [113011]

(2) what monitoring is undertaken by the Prison Service of prison telephone monitoring indexes; [113010]

(3) what guidelines have been established by the Prison Service for the monitoring of prisoners' telephone calls. [113008]

Mr. Boateng: Guidelines to prison staff on the recording and monitoring of prisoners' telephone calls are contained in the Prison Service Security Manual, Prison Standing Order 5G, Circular Instruction 21–1992, Chapters 1 and 2 of Prison Service Order 4400 and Instructions to Governors 87–1995 and 73–1995, copies of which are available in the Library.

These require that all prisoners' telephone calls, other than in open establishments, are recorded and capable of being monitored contemporaneously and from playback of the recordings. Calls made by high and exceptional risk category A prisoners are contemporaneously monitored. Monitoring of other prisoners' calls takes place on a selective basis where there is justifiable suspicion of abuse, supplemented by random monitoring to the extent it is considered necessary for the purposes of security, control and the detection of crime.

Prisons (Rats)

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total expenditure in each of the past three financial years on controlling and treating rat infestations in prisons. [113043]

Mr. Boateng: The information requested is not available.

Regular inspections take place in all prison establishments to check for infestations of pests of all types, and establishments have contracts with pest control firms for action to be taken to deal with any infestations discovered.

Primates

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what primates were brought into this country through Dover on 3 February having sailed on the 'Cap Afrique' from Dunkirk; what was their (a) origin and (b) destination; and what arrangements were made for their welfare during their journey. [110231]

Ms Quin: I have been asked to reply.

According to our records, 60 primates from Mauritius came into Dover on 3 February. These were inspected by a veterinary surgeon at the quarantine premises which was their destination and were found to have travelled well with no signs of ill health or disease. According to Home Office records the ship on which they arrived was the 'Cap Afrique.'

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Dismore: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the terms of reference for the review which he has asked Gurbux Singh to conduct on the Global Cultural Diversity Congress. [113586]

Mr. Straw: I have asked Gurbux Singh to conduct a review with the following terms of reference:

To review the events leading up to the cancellation of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress, including possible implications for corporate governance of the Commission for Racial Equality, and to make recommendations.

The findings of the review will be laid in the Library.

Police Investigations (War Crimes and Torture)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many investigations have been undertaken to date by the Metropolitan police under the provisions of the (a) War Crimes Act 1991 and (b) International Convention on Torture. [112923]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan police has informed me that, between May 1991 and 2 March 2000, 381 individuals have been investigated under the War Crimes Act 1991. He also informs me that two allegations under section 134 of the Criminal Justice Act 1988 (the offence of Torture) have been investigated.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Metropolitan police officers are assigned to the investigation of cases referred to the Metropolitan police under (a) the War Crimes Act 1991 and (b) the International Convention on Torture; and if he will make a statement. [112926]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Commissioner of the Metropolitan police has informed me that no officers are currently assigned to the investigation of cases under the War Crimes Act 1991.

He also informs me that no officers are assigned specifically to the investigation of allegations of torture. Officers are assigned, principally from the Organised Crime Group, as and when allegations are made.

Police Vehicles (Accidents)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many accidents involving police vehicles there were in each police area in each of the past three years; and what was the severity of the injuries incurred in each case. [112924]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information set out in the table has been provided by Her Majesty's Inspectorate of Constabulary, to which forces submit statistical returns. The statistics collect all incidents in which a police vehicle sustains damage, including those where no other vehicle is involved. Figures for the injury classifications are available only for collisions where the police vehicle was responding to an emergency call or in pursuit of another vehicle.

Romanian Orphans Trust

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason the Charity Commission took no action following their investigation of the financial affairs of the Romanian Orphans Trust in 1998. [112929]

Mr. Boateng: After a comprehensive review of the Romanian Orphanage Trust's activities and administration, following allegations of financial impropriety in 1998, the Charity Commission concluded there was no evidence to substantiate the allegations. The Commission decided that, while the charity was having to operate in extremely difficult circumstances, charitable funds were protected and proper safeguards and management controls were in place.

The Charity Commission has been in contact with the charity about new allegations which have recently come to light and is evaluating them carefully. Commission Investigation officers will continue to seek to ensure that charitable funds are used appropriately and properly.

Essex Constabulary

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many (a) police officers and (b) constables there will be in (i) the Colchester Division and (ii) the Tendering Division of the Essex Constabulary on 31 March; and what were the equivalent figures for the same date in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999; [113108]

(2) how many (a) police officers and (b) constables there will be in the Essex Constabulary at the time when the new boundaries for the Metropolitan police come into force; and if he will provide the equivalent figures for the same enlarged area for 31 March in (a) 1997, (b) 1998 and (c) 1999. [113111]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information has been provided by the Chief Constable of Essex. I understand that the force is only able to provide figures as at 1 March for each year for the number of officers in the Colchester and Tendering Divisions. These are set out in the tables.

Ministers have no direct control over police numbers. Under legislation passed by the previous Government in 1994, it is for individual chief constables to determine the number of police officers in their forces within the resources that are available. It is not, therefore, possible for us to estimate how many officers Essex would have had if the boundary changes had been implemented in earlier years. I understand from the Chief Constable that for 2000–01 it is estimated that the Essex Police will have 2,995 police officers (115 more than on 1 March 2000) following the boundary changes on 1 April; 2,307 out of this total will be constables (90 more than on 1 March 2000).

I understand from the Chief Constable that the reduction in police numbers in Colchester and Tendering Divisions is a result of centralisation of the force information room and the civilianisation of non-operational police posts. This has contributed to an increase in the number of operational officers that are available.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what areas are to be transferred from the Metropolitan Police to the Essex Police. [113106]

Mr. Charles Clarke: On 1 April 2000, the responsibility for policing the part of Epping Forest District currently policed by the Metropolitan Police Service will transfer to the Essex Police. This area is defined in legislation as the parish of Waltham Abbey and the area of the former urban district of Chigwell. It includes Waltham Abbey, Chigwell, Loughton and Buckhurst Hill.

Anti-social Behaviour Orders

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many anti-social behaviour orders have been applied for in each police force area in (a) England and (b) Wales; and if he will make a statement. [113134]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I refer to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Surrey Heath (Mr. Hawkins) on 21 February 2000, Official Report, column 824W.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what recent discussions he has held with local authorities about increasing the use of anti-social behaviour orders. [113125]

Mr. Charles Clarke: On 15 October 1999, my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary wrote to the Chief Executive of each local authority about the provisions in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998, including the anti-social behaviour order, to tackle problems caused by unruly behaviour. An action group was subsequently established, involving representatives of local authorities and others, to consider issues relating to the use of anti-social behaviour orders. That group is now arranging a series of 10 regional seminars. The seminars will be held over the next few weeks and will provide an opportunity to share good practice, based on the rising number of successful applications for anti-social behaviour orders, and to consult on the terms of a model agreement, or protocol, which local partnerships can use as a basis for effective co-operation in tackling anti-social behaviour.

Departmental Recruitment

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total cost to public funds of his Department's current recruitment advertising campaign for (a) press officers and (b) internal communications advisers; and if he will make a statement. [113208]

Mr. Straw: The total cost of current press officer recruitment advertising is approximately £31,700, including VAT. The Government Information and Communication Service has funded this advertising centrally, as the appointed press officers will be members of the Service and the recruitment process is likely to provide candidates for other Government press offices. There has been no cost to the Home Office. The total cost of advertising for internal communication advisers is £26,555 plus VAT. In addition, Capita RAS has charged the Home Office £15,300 plus VAT for its recruitment services, which include sifting and preparing interview panel facilities for the internal communication posts.

Voting Methods (Pilot Projects)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, further to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and the Weald of 29 February on pilot projects of alternative voting methods, (a) for what reasons (i) the Local government Association and (ii) journalists were informed of his provisional decisions, and why he imposed no restriction on publication before Parliament had been informed, (b) why he chose not to inform Parliament of his provisional decisions, (c) if he expects his final decisions on the projects to differ from his provisional decisions, and (d) if he will list the journalists whom he informed of his provisional decisions on 15 February; and if he will make a statement. [113279]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The information was made available to journalists and the Local Government Association because they requested it.

No statement was made to Parliament as my decisions were only provisional. Final decisions will not be made until after the Representation of the People Bill has received Royal Assent, at which point Parliament will be informed of them.

One journalist from "The Independent" newspaper was given the information on 15 February. Others were given it, on request, later in that week.

Press Office

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his plans to increase the size of his Department's Press Office; what will be the cost of those plans; and if he will make a statement. [113207]

Mr. Straw: I refer the right hon. Member to the replies I gave her on 2 March 2000, Official Report, columns 384–85W.

Refugee Dispersal

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the outcome to date of the policy of dispersal of refugees. [99707]

Mrs. Roche [pursuant to her reply, 6 December 1999, c. 379–80W]: I propose to bring in the new support arrangements on Monday 3 April 2000 for asylum seekers who make their applications at a port of entry from that date. The entitlement of new port applicants to cash, social security and housing benefits will thereupon cease; in-country applicants do not have this entitlement.

Those who apply for asylum from that date and who are then detained at Oakington reception centre whether their application is port or in-country will go onto the new support arrangements.

I shall also make arrangements for asylum seekers who claim asylum and support from 3 April in Scotland or Northern Ireland and who are eligible for support to come on to the new support arrangements.

It is my intention to bring the new support arrangements on stream as soon as possible for other asylum seekers who make in-country applications for asylum in England and Wales and for those in England and Wales who claim asylum at their port of entry prior to 3 April 2000 who receive a negative decision and who then go on to appeal. Until then, responsibility for providing support will continue under the terms of Schedule 9 of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999.

The new support arrangements comprehensively change the system by which asylum seekers are supported. A phased implementation of the kind described in this answer is the sensible course, drawing on the lessons from previous experience in implementing major change. The arrangements have been tested in simulated trials. Bringing port applicants on to the scheme first will enable the National Asylum Support Service to deal with any teething difficulties before rolling out the scheme fully.

The new support arrangements provide that asylum seekers who would otherwise be destitute may be supported by the National Asylum Support Service. Support will consist of the provision of accommodation on a no-choice basis in cluster areas in the United Kingdom. Essential living needs will be met either in kind or by the provision of vouchers. There will also be a cash voucher valued at £10 per person per week which can be exchanged for cash.

The scheme is intended fully to meet the United Kingdom's international obligations in relation to those who are genuinely fleeing persecution while, at the same time, deterring those who are seeking to evade immigration control by using the asylum process.

During the passage of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999, we gave an undertaking that new asylum applications from families with children would not be brought on to the new support arrangements in April 2000 unless we are satisfied that the targets of delivering most initial asylum decisions within two months and most appeals in a further four months could be met in such cases.

We have put in place arrangements to identify and deal promptly with new asylum applications from families with children: the arrangements are being closely monitored. As a result, provisional figures show that, of the new family applications made in eight weeks after 1 November, over 70 per cent. have received an initial decision within two months of receipt. At the end of January, the average waiting time for all asylum appeals to be dealt with by an adjudicator was 13 weeks. On this basis, I have decided that from 3 April, the new asylum support arrangements should apply to new applications from families with children as they apply to other applicants.

I have also decided that some modification of the targets is necessary for applications which might be the responsibility of another European Union member state under the Dublin Convention. In these cases, the process of consulting other member states normally takes more than two months, but there is then no suspensive right of appeal if another country accepts responsibility for consideration of the substantive claim. For that reason, the target for reaching an initial decision in potential Dublin cases will be to resolve most cases within four months of receipt. The normal further four month target for dealing with an appeal will apply in the event that the case is not transferred and there is a substantive refusal.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Police Federation Meetings

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland on how many occasions, and on what dates in the past three years, each regional board of the Police Federation has held special meetings. [108489]

Mr. Ingram: The following table shows the number of special meetings held by each region of the Police Federation for Northern Ireland in the last three years.

Region	Dates
No. 1	15 October 1999

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112668]

Mr. Ingram: The annual Cabinet Office publication, "Public Bodies" provides information on a range of public bodies including those in Northern Ireland. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions lists public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

New Departments (Titles)

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the process by which the titles of the new departments and the Information Service of the Northern Ireland Executive were decided. [112788]

Mr. Mandelson: The titles of the Northern Ireland Departments are set in statute in the Departments (Northern Ireland) Order 1999. The Order was made following a statement issued by the First Minister (Designate) and Deputy First Minister (Designate) on 18 December 1998 on structures (including Departmental titles) and functions across the then proposed new Departments. The statement was considered and ratified by the shadow Northern Ireland Assembly in January 1999 and the Departments (Northern Ireland) Order 1999 specifies the Departmental titles agreed at that time.

In relation to the Information Service this was an interim short title designed to distinguish the Information Service of the Executive from that of the Northern Ireland Office. The title would have been subject to consideration by the Executive Committee in the context of proposals for corporate identity and for a communications strategy which were in preparation at the time of suspension.

Rosemary Nelson

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current position on the investigation into the murder of Rosemary Nelson. [113637]

Mr. Ingram: A dedicated team, selected and led by Deputy Chief Constable Colin Port, continues to work tirelessly to track down and bring before the courts those responsible for this cowardly murder. This team, which consists of representatives from 25 policing agencies, including the Royal Ulster Constabulary, has in excess of 60 personnel, 60 per cent. of whom are from outside the RUC. To date they have interviewed more than 5,000 individuals, taken 1,500 statements and established 5,000 lines of investigation in their efforts to catch the killers. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State, who has kept in touch with DCC Port, today took the opportunity to meet his team at one of their bases in Lurgan and to hear at first hand about the progress to date in this investigation. The Government are convinced that Mr. Port continues to lead a credible and effective investigation and welcome all the support and co-operation that can be given to the team in its work to solve this appalling crime.

Northern Ireland Act 2000

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the terms and scope of the review to be carried out under Section 2 of the Northern Ireland Act 2000. [113454]

Mr. Mandelson: Following my decision on 11 February to suspend the operation of the institutions, both Governments will be consulting the political parties in Northern Ireland this week. These consultations are expected to continue during and after St. Patrick's Day following which the two Prime Ministers will review progress. They will focus on how best confidence can be rebuilt to enable the institutions to be restored so that the full implementation of the Agreement can be achieved.

Social Enterprise Sector

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what action he has initiated since the publication of the Social Exclusion Unit Policy Action Team 3 report on Enterprise and Social Exclusion (A National Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal) to improve access to finance for social enterprises; and if he will make a statement. [113452]

Mr. Timms: Since the publication of the PAT3 report, the Government have announced the creation of the Phoenix Fund, a £30 million programme to promote better access to business support and finance in deprived communities. This will include an enterprise development fund, help for community finance initiatives, and a network of 1000 volunteer business mentors. The Government have also announced that HM Treasury will have an observer role on the Social Investment Taskforce, established by the UK Social Investment Forum. This Task Force will look at the next steps in devising a strategic framework for social investment, including investment in social enterprises.

Fuel Excise

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what estimate his Department has made of the loss of taxation revenue from excise duty and VAT from hauliers purchasing fuel on mainland Europe; [112910]

(2) what recent studies his Department has made of the number of hauliers purchasing fuel from mainland Europe and the Republic of Ireland; and what were the conclusions of the studies. [112911]

Mr. Timms: HM Customs and Excise has responsibility for excise revenue. There are no current studies or estimates for the numbers of hauliers purchasing fuel from mainland Europe and the Republic of Ireland.

Pensions

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what the legislative basis is for the Inland Revenue taxing pensions on the amount entitled to rather than the amount received in one year. [112920]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The legislation governing the basis of assessment of pensions under Schedule E is in Section 41 of the Finance Act 1989.

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Brady: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the amount of additional revenue which will be made available to the National Health Service in 2000–01 as a result of hypothecation of increased levels of tobacco duty. [112786]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Projections of tobacco revenue will be published at the time of the Budget.

Social Investment Taskforce

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the (a) aims, (b) objectives and (c) work programme of the Social Investment Taskforce; and if he will make a statement. [113055]

Mr. Timms: The Social Investment Taskforce is an initiative led by the UK Social Investment Forum. The Chancellor of the Exchequer has asked the Social Investment Taskforce to report to him in the autumn with proposals for a new strategic framework for the development of social investment in the UK. The Taskforce will:

examine the case for social investment in regeneration and community economic development; identify barriers to the further development of social investment; and propose models for the future development of social investment.

EU Tax Policy

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those third countries and dependent or associated territories which the EC Commission intends to consult, pursuant to ECOFIN's report to the European Council on Reinforced Tax Policy Cooperation. [113071]

Dawn Primarolo: As the report makes clear, it is for member states to pursue discussions with their dependent or associated territories in co-operation with the Commission. The Presidency and the Commission would deliberate with third countries. The geographic coverage of these further discussions and deliberations is for future consideration.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Legislation (Human Rights)

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Solicitor-General what training is being provided for Government lawyers to ensure that legislation is prepared to comply with human rights. [113453]

The Solicitor-General: The main responsibility for training rests with individual Departments which are best placed to identify the legal skills and knowledge required by their lawyers and the most economic and effective way of meeting those needs.

Training on the European Convention on Human Rights (ECHR) and the Human Rights Act 1998 (HRA) has been provided, and is continuing to be provided, to all Government lawyers. This has taken the form of Civil Service/GLS wide Conferences (open to both lawyers and administrators) at which outside speakers including Judges and Counsel have spoken; two intensive one-day courses provided last year by the Civil Service College, in conjunction with the GLS, and to be run again this year; and internal training programmes run by individual Departments (but often open to lawyers from other Departments) where speakers have included both specialist Counsel and Government lawyers with ECHR/HRA expertise. In addition, many Government lawyers have attended the external training courses/seminars run, for example, by leading human rights sets of barristers' Chambers. The introductory course for all lawyers new to the GLS also includes a session on human rights.

Such training has meant that Government lawyers are fully equipped, not only to ensure that all new legislation complies with the European Convention on Human Rights, but also to advise their Departments on all human rights issues when they arise in the decision making process or in the context of litigation.

PRIME MINISTER

Correspondence

Mr. Brady: To ask the Prime Minister when he will reply to the letter dated 12 January which was sent to him by the Chairman of the Royal Society of St. George. [112482]

The Prime Minister: My Office has no record of having received this letter.

National Health Service

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if the five point plan for the National Health Service announced on 29 February will apply to Wales. [112912]

The Prime Minister: The responsibility for health issues in Wales has been devolved to the National Assembly for Wales and it is for it to decide whether or not to adopt the five point plan.

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Prime Minister when he was informed of the cancellation of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress and the collapse of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd, and by whom; and if he will make a statement. [112719]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 2 March 2000]: My Office was informed that my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary had decided that it would not be justifiable to use substantial public funds to support the Global Cultural Diversity Congress on 21 February 2000.

World Education Forum

Mr. Sayeed: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to attend the World Education Forum in Dakar, Senegal; and if he will make a statement. [113087]

The Prime Minister: The United Kingdom delegation to the conference has yet to be decided.

Iraq

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will discuss with (a) President Clinton and (b) the Federal German Chancellor the resignation of (i) Hans von Sponeck and (ii) Jutta Burghardt from their UN assignments in Baghdad. [113359]

The Prime Minister [holding answer 6 March 2000]: No.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Visitor's Bond Scheme

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those countries outside the UK which operate a visitor's bond scheme. [113138]

Mrs. Roche: We do not have comprehensive information, but we understand that broadly comparable schemes exist in Canada, Germany and the United States of America.

Police

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reason injury awards made to police officers in lieu of earnings remain payable after retirement age. [112556]

Mr. Charles Clarke: An injury award is payable as a form of compensation where a police officer becomes permanently disabled for police duty as the result of an injury received in the execution of their duty.

The award compensates an officer for the reduction in their earning capacity. In the wider context, it is considered that earning capacity should be related to a person's main source of livelihood. Therefore, where a police officer has reached retirement age their injury pension will continue to be paid where their opportunity to obtain a larger pension has also been reduced by the injury.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the police personnel procedure regulations in respect of the provision to allow those suffering from long-term sickness to have their employment terminated. [112557]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There is no provision within Police Regulations for the termination of employment solely on the ground of long-term sickness.

The Police Pensions Regulations provide for compulsory retirement on the ground of permanent disablement.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the applicability to current conditions of the police pension regulations; what plans he has to update these; and if he will make a statement. [112562]

Mr. Charles Clarke: I am currently considering what changes are required to the police pensions regulations, following the current major review of all aspects of police pension arrangements. I hope to publish specific proposals in spring this year.

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people (a) in total and (b) from ethnic minorities (i) applied and (ii) were recruited to the police in each year since 1995. [113466]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The table sets out the information requested for 1995 to 1998. Figures for 1999 are not yet available.

The figure for the total of appointments on probation for 1996 differs from that mentioned in my reply to the hon. Member for Southwark, North and Bermondsey (Mr. Hughes) on 11 November 1999, Official Report, column 796W. This is because North Wales Police have since corrected their figure of "0" for 1996 to "49".

Total police officer applications and recruitment in England and Wales from 1995

	Ethnic minorities	Total officers
1995
Police officer appointment on probation	217	5,585
Police officer applications	1,426	53,909

Pets

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to encourage local authorities to use the options of (a) restriction of species range and (b) restriction of numbers under the Pet Animals Act 1951; and if he will make a statement. [112561]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government keep under review legislation on animals, but have not announced any plans to change it. Existing legislation bears on the range of species and number of animals which can be sold in pet shops.

Pet shops are licensed by local authorities under the Pet Animals Act 1951 (as amended in 1983), and subject to licence conditions to safeguard the health and welfare of the animals in their charge. In considering whether to grant a licence to run a pet shop, a local authority will need to satisfy itself that the welfare of the animals will not be compromised. The species and numbers of animals will have a direct bearing on the overall welfare conditions.

In addition, certain endangered animals imported for the pet trade are also protected under European Wildlife Regulations, which implement the Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species of Wild Fauna and Flora (CITES). Some exotic pets can be lawfully sold to people only subject to stringent licence controls imposed under the Dangerous Wild Animals Act 1976, and there are statutory restrictions on trade in United Kingdom wildlife species. It is also an offence under the Protection of Animals Act 1911 to cause unnecessary suffering to any domestic or captive animal.

Animal Experiments

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, (1) pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2000, Official Report, columns 257–58W, on animal experiments, how many of the pigs used were transgenic; and if he will make a statement; [112633]

(2) pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2000, Official Report, columns 257–58W, on animal experiments, how many primates were killed by order of the Home Office Inspectorate under the provisions of section 18(3) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, on the ground that they were undergoing excessive suffering; what procedures they had been subjected to; and if he will make a statement; [112564]

(3) pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2000, Official Report, columns 257–58W, on animal experiments, in the case of primates used in organ transplant experiments, how many primates had an organ of their own removed and replaced with a pig organ; how many had a pig organ inserted into them but kept their own organ; and if he will make a statement; [112565]

(4) pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2000, Official Report, columns 257–58W, on animal experiments, how many of these primates were wild-caught; and if he will make a statement; [112629]

(5) pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2000, Official Report, columns 257–58W, on animal experimentation, if he will provide a breakdown of the cause of death of all the primates used in xenotransplantation research between 1996 and 1999; and if he will make a statement; [112630]

(6) pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2000, Official Report, columns 257–58W, on animal experiments, if he will describe the experiments in which these primates were used; and if he will make a statement; [112631]

(7) pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2000, Official Report, columns 257–58W, on animal experimentation, how many pigs were used in (a) breeding experiments aimed at producing pigs with certain desired genetic characteristics and (b) experiments involving the removal of pig organs for transplantation into primates; and if he will make a statement. [112632]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: None of the primates were killed by order of the Home Office Inspectorate under the provisions of Section 18(3) of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986 on the ground that they were undergoing excessive suffering. All of the decisions to treat or euthanase the animals were made by the relevant named veterinary surgeon.

My previous answer explained that the majority of the primates were euthanased once they began to show clinical or biochemical evidence of terminal organ failure or when their clinical condition began to give cause for concern. The aim of this procedure is to prevent unnecessary suffering to the animals.

Twenty-nine wild-caught primates were used in xenotransplanation research in 1996; 16 in 1997; three in 1998 and none in 1999.

I am unable to provide answers to the hon. Gentleman's remaining questions as to do so would involve the release of commercially sensitive information on experimental design and production strategy, which is precluded by section 24 of the 1986 Act.

As I stated in my previous answer, we understand that the company concerned has already briefed the hon. Gentleman on its xenotransplanation programme and it has indicated that it would be happy to update the hon. Gentleman and other parliamentary colleagues on the most recent position.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department with reference to table 11 of the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals in GB for 1998, relating to procedures carried out on dogs to satisfy legislative requirements, if he will identify the legislative requirements, indicating the number of licences awarded in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999 to allow procedures to be carried out and the number of procedures carried out under each licence; and if he will make a statement. [112563]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The Government recognise the particular concern about the use of dogs in scientific procedures. Under the terms of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986, animals may be used only where there are no alternatives and where the benefits of the programme outweigh any suffering caused to the animals concerned. In addition, certain species (including dogs) can be used only where animals of no other species are suitable. Special conditions, tailored to each project, control and minimise any pain or suffering caused.

Examples of specific legislative requirements relevant to Table 11 (Scientific procedures (toxicology) by species of animal, type of legislation and toxicological purpose) are provided in the Introductory Notes to the Statistics of Scientific Procedures on Living Animals (Great Britain 1998). They are:

The Medicines Act 1968;

The Health and Safety at Work Act 1974;

Control of Substances Hazardous to Health (COSHH) Regulations;

Control of Pesticides Regulations 1986;

European Union Pesticides Directives; and

The Food Safety Act 1990.

Table 11 records 4,275 procedures carried out on dogs in 1998. These were conducted under 39 separate project licenses. Tables 13, 15 and 16 provide further information on the type of toxicological tests used. The number of procedures carried out under each licence was as follows:

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many police officers have been involved in the protection of Senator Pinochet since October 1998; [113513]

(2) how much has been spent from public funds on protecting Senator Pinochet since October 1998 (a) in total and (b) broken down by the principal heads of expenditure. [113514]

Mr. Straw: The information requested cannot be provided for security reasons. The number of officers deployed to protect Senator Pinochet by the Surrey police and the Metropolitan police are operational issues for the appropriate chief officer of police.

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his estimate of the costs to public funds of Government participation in legal activity relating to General Pinochet (a) to date and (b) in total; and if he will break this information down by the principal heads of expenditure. [113529]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by the Under-Secretary of State for the Home Department, Lord Bassam, on 2 March 2000, Official Report, House of Lords, column WA87.

Local Government Elections (Freepost Mailings)

Miss Widdecombe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the Government's policy regarding freepost mailings at local government elections; and if he will make a statement. [112457]

Mr. Mike O'Brien [holding answer 1 March 2000]: Under current legislation, there is no provision for freepost mailing at local government elections because of the considerable financial burden which would have to be borne by local authorities, and the lack of evidence that such schemes would contribute to improved democracy at local level.

We are now seeking two changes to this position. First, in view of the exceptional size of the electorate, we intend to provide special arrangements for the first election of the Mayor of London to allow the compilation of a single booklet of election addresses for mayoral candidates to a standard format. This will be distributed to all London electors at taxpayers' expense. For future elections, we propose that there should be an Order making power to allow the Greater London Authority to organise and pay for mailings (or other ways of informing the public about candidates). Any such scheme would be developed in consultation with the proposed Electoral Commission.

Secondly, we are providing the opportunity for local authorities to pilot, at their own expense, a freepost mailing scheme.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many asylum seekers were living in the Greater London area on 1 February. [113085]

Mrs. Roche: This information is not held centrally.

Harmondsworth Detention Centre

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) deaths and (b) injuries have occurred in Harmondsworth Detention Centre in the last 12 months. [113007]

Mrs. Roche: Between the period 1 March 1999 and 29 February 2000, there was one death at the Harmondsworth Detention Centre. This occurred on 24 January when a 49-year-old Lithuanian national was found hanged. A date for the Coroner's inquest is awaited.

During this same period, there were a total of 10 incidents involving injuries to detainees. These included six incidents where detainees sustained injury by self harm, and one incident involving detainees fighting which led to a detainee being injured. On three occasions, an accident in the Centre resulted in injury to a detainee.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what review of health and safety procedures in Harmondsworth Detention Centre has been undertaken following the recent death of an asylum seeker in the centre. [113006]

Mrs. Roche: Following this tragic incident, immediate steps were taken to further reduce the number of possible ligatures points within the Harmondsworth Detention Centre. An investigation into the death of the detainee has been completed and a copy of the report has been sent to the Coroner. The Immigration Service is examining in detail all those recommendations that refer to health and safety procedures.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the provision of an on-call Samaritan service to detainees in Harmondsworth Detention Centre. [113004]

Mrs. Roche: Within the Harmondsworth Detention Centre there are notices, translated into a number of languages, detailing the services of the Samaritans. Information on contacting them is also provided in a brochure given to each detainee upon arrival at the Centre. Any detainee unable to make a telephone call to them is advised to speak to a member of staff who will allow the use of an official telephone for such calls.

A representative of the Samaritans visits the Centre once a month.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidelines are provided to staff at Harmondsworth Detention Centre about monitoring detainees with suicidal tendencies. [113003]

Mrs. Roche: All detainees who are considered to be at risk of committing suicide are interviewed by staff on their arrival at the Centre to identify their immediate needs. A Suicide Prevention Committee, chaired by the Centre Manager, monitors potential suicide risks and considers what steps can be taken to minimise the risk of such an event.

Within the Centre, those detainees who are considered to be at high risk of suicide are placed on a constant watch and may be confined to a small area where their behaviour can be closely monitored. Where the risk of suicide is lower the detainee is monitored every 15 minutes. It is recognised that the Harmondsworth Detention Centre is not a suitable location for those detainees displaying serious suicidal tendencies and arrangements are made to transfer such detainees to more suitable locations.

Suicide awareness training has been provided by a member of the Samaritans who is also the Chairman of the Harmondsworth Visiting Committee.

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action his Department has taken in response to the annual report of the Harmondsworth Detention Centre's Visiting Committee in relation to the care of asylum seekers with depression and suicidal tendencies. [113005]

Mrs. Roche: The Immigration Service commissioned an assessment to enable a better understanding of the health needs of immigration detainees to be achieved. This was completed by Dr. Geraint Thomas, the medical practitioner at Tinsley House, and incorporated a general overview of the medical requirements, mental health and morbidity of male and female detainees and families. This was completed in April 1999 and distributed to medical health staff at Harmondsworth. The provision of nursing services at Harmondsworth Detention Centre was also extended to 12 hours each day.

Ticket Touting

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to implement the provisions contained in the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 to make ticket touting an offence at all major sporting events. [112958]

Mr. Charles Clarke: This matter is kept under close review and representatives of other sports are periodically consulted. Section 166 of the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 currently makes it an offence for an unauthorised person to sell, or offer or expose for sale, a ticket for a designated football match. The law applies to football because the risk of disorder associated with that sport is increased if ground segregation is undermined by the sale of unauthorised tickets. There is no evidence to suggest that other sports are currently experiencing significant crowd safety and security problems as a result of ticket touting.

Paedophiles

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if all police divisions in the UK have in place a computer system to exchange information with each division on paedophiles. [112915]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Police National Computer (PNC) is the premier national information system available to police officers in all United Kingdom forces, and will increasingly become available to other Criminal Justice agencies. Data on all sex offenders are held on the PNC which is accessible to police officers in all forces.

In addition, the Sex Offenders Act 1997 requires offenders cautioned or convicted of certain sexual offences, including certain sexual offences against children, to notify the local police of their name, address and any changes, as well as their date of birth within 14 days of caution/conviction or change of address.

Police Pension Scheme

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers in each police force in England have opted out of the Police Pension Scheme. [112962]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The Police Pension Scheme is administered locally by individual police authorities. The information requested is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Home Detention Curfew Scheme

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) of 27 January 2000, Official Report, column 249W, if he will list, for each category of offence, the specific offences for which those prisoners released to date under the Home Detention Curfew scheme were convicted; what was the (a) average and (b) maximum sentence (i) received and (ii) served for each offence; and if he will make a statement. [112739]

Mr. Boateng [holding answer 2 March 2000]: A further breakdown of the original offences committed by prisoners released under the Home Detention Curfew scheme in 1999 is shown in the table. The data are taken from the Prison Service's inmate information system based on the data recorded by each prison. The maximum sentence for each type of offence, and maximum time served, could be obtained only at disproportionate cost by manually sifting the details of some 15,000 prisoners who were placed on Home Detention Curfew in 1999.

In operating the Home Detention Curfew scheme the Prison Service has an overriding duty to protect the public. No prisoner can be placed on Home Detention Curfew without first passing a risk assessment. Where there is a likelihood of offending while on curfew, or of breaching the curfew, or where the risk to the public is unacceptable, Home Detention Curfew is refused. The effectiveness of the risk assessment is demonstrated by the fact that overall the scheme has an impressive success rate of 95 per cent. of curfewees completing their period of curfew licence.

Interception of Communications

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the number of interceptions of communications on non-public telecommunications networks in 1998 and 1999 by (a) law enforcement agencies and (b) others. [111134]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The statutory framework regulating interception of communications sent by post or by means of public telecommunication systems in the United Kingdom is provided by the Interception of Communications Act 1985. This Act does not extend to non-public telecommunications networks. The Government are legislating, through the Regulation of Investigatory Powers Bill, to extend the law to regulate this kind of interception.

Because current law does not require a warrant to be signed by the Secretary of State in order for interception to be carried out on non-public telecommunications networks, figures for such interceptions are not held centrally.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Parental Leave

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the cost of extending the entitlement to unpaid parental leave to staff in his Department in respect of their children born before 15 December 1999. [113136]

Mr. Wills: It is not known how many civil servants in the Department for Education and Employment have children born before 15 December 1999, nor how many would take parental leave if they became entitled to it. Information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

A-level Computing Examination, 1999

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many (a) requests for re-marks, (b) requests for re-marks with reports and (c) appeals against decisions were lodged with the AQA in respect of the 1999 GCE 'A' level computing examination. [112035]

Requests for re-marks with reports	85

Bishop Gilpin Primary School

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will authorise the age of transfer proposals in relation to the two form entry year four at Bishop Gilpin Primary School due to go ahead in September 2000. [R] [111618]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 February 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State hopes to make a decision on the age of transfer proposals across Merton Local Education Authority by April.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he will reply to the Question from the hon. Member for Putney tabled on 17 February relating to Bishop Gilpin School. [113449]

Jacqui Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the above reply.

Examination Scripts

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what plans he has to make available to candidates the marked scripts of 'A' level and GCSE examinations. [112034]

Mr. Wicks: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced on 30 November 1999 that measures would ensure access to all GCE 'A' level and some GCSE marked examination scripts in 2000 and all GCSE scripts from 2001.

School Exclusions (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many permanent school exclusions there were in each year since 1990 (a) in total and (b) of pupils of ethnic minority origin. [113497]

Jacqui Smith: The number of permanent exclusions from maintained schools (except Special Schools) submitting returns under the voluntary National Exclusions Reporting System which covered the period from April 1990 to April 1992 was 2,910 in year one and 3,833 in year two.

The first set of complete data systematically collected by the Department on permanent exclusions by ethnic minority from maintained schools in England related to the school year 1995–96. The latest available data relate to the school year 1997–98. These figures, which are not directly comparable with those derived from the National Exclusions Reporting System, are shown in the table.

Information on permanent exclusions for the academic year 1998–99 is currently being collected and national estimates are expected to be published in a Statistical First Release in May.

Numbers of permanent exclusions, including pupils of ethnic minority origin in schools [1] in England 1995–96—1997–98

	Number of permanent exclusions [2]	Number of ethnic minority permanent exclusions
1997–98	12,298	1,995
1996–97	12,668	2,113
1995–96	12,476	2,196

[1] Includes Maintained Primary, Secondary, Special and Non-maintained Special Schools.

[2] Includes some pupils who were unclassified according to ethnic group.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of his Department's electricity is generated from renewable sources; and what target his Department has for meeting its electricity needs from renewable sources by 2010. [113052]

Mr. Wills: My Department has secured 10 per cent. of its supply of electricity from renewable sources, from October last year. This meets the aim set for achievement by the year 2010. We will continue to monitor developments in renewable energy provision to improve on this wherever possible.

"Computers for Teachers"

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will extend the Computers for Teachers Programme to teachers in sixth form colleges. [112822]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 3 March 2000]: Schools have a legal obligation to teach IT, both as a curriculum subject in its own right, and across all other subjects. The burden of this teaching role falls largely upon the classroom teacher. In order to provide teachers with the skills to discharge this responsibility, the New Opportunities Fund (NOF) ICT Training programme was developed specifically for teachers in schools, and it aims to give serving teachers the opportunity to raise their pedagogical capability to that now required of newly qualified teachers.

The purpose of the Computers for Teachers initiative is to complement that training by raising teacher competence and confidence in their personal use of ICT. For this reason, the scheme has given priority to school teachers and there are no current plans to extend it to teachers in sixth form colleges.

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment when he was informed of the cancellation of the Global Cultural Diversity Congress and the collapse of Global Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd., and by whom; and if he will make a statement. [112797]

Ms Hodge [holding answer 3 March 2000]: The decision to notify interested parties of the cancellation of the Congress and the collapse of Global Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. were matters for the company. They informed my Department on 23 February 2000 that the Congress had been cancelled.

Free School Meals

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate the (a) cost in the current financial year of providing free school meals and (b) additional annual cost of extending the scheme to include (i) children in full-time education whose families are in receipt of working families tax credit and (ii) all children in full-time education. [112946]

Jacqui Smith: The Department does not collect information on the cost of providing free school meals. We estimate that (a) the cost of providing free school meals in England in the current financial year is over £300 million; and that (b) the additional annual cost of (i) extending free school meals to children in full-time education whose families are in receipt of working families tax credit would be over £400 million; and (ii) extending free school meals to all children would be almost £2 billion.

We have no current plans to extend eligibility for free school meals, which would require primary legislation, but we are working closely with the Child Poverty Action Group on ways of increasing take-up by entitled pupils.

Physical Education

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many pupils at (a) primary and (b) secondary schools are currently meeting the Government's target that they participate in more than two hours a week of physical education. [112957]

Jacqui Smith: Ofsted collects information about the percentage of taught time for each subject when inspecting schools. The number of school hours spent on physical education varies from school to school. Evidence from Ofsted inspections during 1998 of the average number of hours per week primary and secondary schools currently spend teaching National Curriculum PE is as follows.

	Average hours of PE per week (approx.)
Key Stage 1 (ages 5–7)	1 hour 20 minutes
Key Stage 2 (ages 7–11)	1 hour 35 minutes
Key Stage 3 (ages 11–14)	2 hours
Key Stage 4 (ages (14–16)	1 hour 15 minutes

Our aspiration is that pupils receive two hours of physical activity a week, including the National Curriculum and extra curricular activities.

My officials are meeting regularly with DCMS and representatives of PE and sports organisations to discuss ways of promoting this.

Computers on Loan

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what progress has been made towards the provision of computers on loan as outlined in his speech of 28 October 1999 to the United Kingdom Internet Summit. [112642]

Mr. Wills: The Government are making £15 million available for a pilot scheme—'Computers Within Reach'—to enable those who cannot afford new computers to acquire reconditioned computers for use in the home on a loaned or owned basis for the purpose of improving their employment prospects, for lifelong learning, or for their children's homework. The pilot scheme will run from May, and evaluation findings of the initiative will be made available in due course.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112662]

Mr. Wills: The annual Cabinet Office publication 'Public Bodies' provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions list public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

EU Discussions (Schools)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his Department's policy respecting the maintenance of political neutrality in discussing the future of the EU in schools. [112341]

Jacqui Smith: Pupils in England are taught about Europe and the European Union at secondary school. From the start of the school year 2000 they will be taught about the history of Britain in its European and wider context within National Curriculum History and from 2002 they will be taught about the world as a global community, the role of the European Union and the UK's relations in Europe, including the European Union in National Curriculum Citizenship.

There are safeguards in law to ensure that where political issues are discussed in school it is in an unbiased and balanced way. Local Education Authorities, governing bodies and head teachers are required under section 407 of the Education Act 1996 to take such steps as are reasonably practicable to secure that where political issues are brought to the attention of pupils, they are offered a balanced presentation of opposing views.

Racism

Lorna Fitzsimons: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) what proportion of (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) colleges of further education have procedures in place to record racist incidents; [111291]

(2) what was the total number of racist incidents recorded during the period 15 April 1999 to 31 December 1999 in England in (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools and (c) colleges of further education. [111292]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 February 2000]: Our "Social Inclusion: Pupil Support" guidance in July 1999 states that all schools' behaviour policies must make clear that racial harassment will not be tolerated, and say how staff and pupils should deal with it. Schools should record all racial incidents and parents and Governors should be informed of such incidents and the action taken to deal with them. Governing bodies should inform LEAs annually of the pattern and frequency of any incidents. Colleges of Further Education have policies in place to deal with complaints, and procedures to investigate incidents. Information on the total number of racist incidents recorded in schools and colleges in England during the period 15 April 1999 to 31 December 1999 is not held centrally.

New Deal

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many calls have been made to the New Deal Hotline in (a) Scotland and (b) the UK; how many were from (i) clients and (ii) employers; and how many were (1) positive comments and (2) complaints. [111137]

Ms Jowell: In the period October 1998 (when records started) to January 2000; a total of 1,652 calls were made to the New Deal Hotline of which 376 came from Scotland. We do not disaggregate the source of calls by category of caller and only the complaints are identified separately from all other calls. In the UK, 344 of the calls made were classed as complaints of which 62 came from Scotland. The Employment Service follows up every complaint to a conclusion.

Mr. Maclean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what proportion of New Deal participants who have undertaken an option have moved into the employment option; to what extent Government targets in exercise of the employment option have been achieved; and if he will make a statement. [109283]

Ms Jowell: Since the start of New Deal 7.9 per cent. of young people leaving Gateway have moved onto the employment option. Although this is less than the original planning assumption, a further 35.5 per cent. have gone directly into unsubsidised jobs. Together these figures demonstrate how New Deal significantly improves the changes of many young people finding work.

Child Care

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what percentage of people had access to Government-funded child care (a) in rural areas and (b) in urban areas, (i) in the most recent year for which figures are available and (ii) five years ago. [111976]

Ms Hodge: We are unable to provide the information in the format requested, but can provide data on the overall number of new child care places created through government funding. In 1998–99 some 66,000 new child care places were funded through the Out of School Childcare Initiative, the Further Education Funding Council and DfEE grants to Early Years Development Partnerships. This compares with 22,286 new child care places created by the Out of School Childcare Initiative in 1994–95.

Early Years Development and Childcare Partnerships (EYDCPs) are responsible for ensuring full coverage of both urban and rural areas within their areas of remit. EYDCPs have been set up in every local authority area of England. DfEE's planning guidance to Partnerships requires them to pay particular attention to the development and maintenance of provision in rural areas.

Equal Treatment Directive

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on his policy on the proposed Commission directive on equal treatment, as set out in COM (1999) 566, with particular reference to (a) gender mainstreaming, (b) minimum entitlement to redress, (c) burden of proof, (d) indirect discrimination, (e) definition of harassment and (f) positive discrimination. [112350]

Ms Hodge: The Government welcome the European Commission's proposal for a directive covering discrimination on the grounds of race (COM (1999) 566) as an important contribution to combating racial discrimination throughout member states and accession countries. The proposal raises a number of issues including those mentioned by the hon. Member in his question and we will be considering the full implications of these during the course of negotiations. Negotiations are still at an early stage within the Working Group of the Social Affairs Council and adoption will require unanimous agreement by the member states.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Protection Work

Mr. Burden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the impact of the review of MAFF grant in aid on fisheries work undertaken by the Environment Agency and other fisheries protection work. [113343]

Mr. Morley: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) on 27 October 1999, Official Report, column 922W.

Flood Defence

Dr. Naysmith: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if a definition of the developed environment exists allowing flood defence committees to ensure that the risk of flooding is minimised. [111584]

Mr. Morley: The Government's policy is to > reduce the risk to people and the developed and natural environment from flooding and erosion.

The phrase "developed and natural environment" is intended to embrace all of the country's assets. No firm definition of the term "developed environment" exists for the purposes of flood and coastal defence but we generally regard it as land on which development has taken place, for example buildings and roads, as compared with the natural environment which would generally be undeveloped land.

In prioritising funding for flood and coastal defence works one factor which the Government takes into account is whether schemes will protect "urban" or "rural" areas. A scheme will be classified as "urban" only where 50 per cent. or more of the calculated direct benefits relate to industrial, commercial or domestic property, or major infrastructure.

Farmer Suicides

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many suicides amongst farmers have been recorded in each of the past five years. [110528]

Mr. Morley: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Newport, West (Mr. Flynn) on 7 February 2000, Official Report, column 77W.

In addition, the hon. Member may be interested in the information given in the table:

Euro

Mr. Portillo: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much money has been spent to date by his Department and by bodies funded by his Department in connection with the National Changeover Plan; on what headings this money has been spent; and how much his Department plans to spend on implementing the plan over the next 12 months. [112139]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 29 February 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the answer that my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary gave on 29 February 2000, Official Report, column 233W.

Fishing Quotas

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received from the European Commission on further action against discrimination in the awarding of fishing quotas, with reference to OJ C354/67, vol 42, 7.12.99; and if he will make a statement. [112648]

Mr. Morley: As OJ 354/67 states on 14 January 1998 the United Kingdom received a reasoned opinion in respect of the procedures adopted in the UK for allocating quotas. We have responded to that opinion. No further representations have been received from the Commission.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112658]

Mr. Morley: The following public bodies have been established by the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food since May 1997:

Bodies listed in the Cabinet Office publication 'Public Bodies 1999'.

British Potato Council

Expert Group on Vitamins and Minerals.

Bodies recently classified as Non-Departmental Public Bodies and yet to be published in the Cabinet Office publication.

Advisory Committee on Animal Feedingstuffs

Beef Assurance Scheme Panel.

Salmon Fishing

Mr. Denis Murphy: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what will be the (a) starting date, (b) finishing date and (c) the duration of this year's drift net salmon fishing season for the sea area from the River Tyne to the River Tweed. [113177]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 March 2000]: Under current byelaws the drift net salmon fishing season in the sea area from the River Tyne to the River Tweed will for this year, (a) start on 1 June; (b) finish on 31 August and (c) be for a period of 92 days.

Tree Felling Licences

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many tree felling licences have been granted by the Forestry Commission to the RSPB in each of the last five years; and how many trees have been felled as a result. [113115]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The number of licences issued to the RSPB in each of the last five years and the number of trees licensed for felling are given in the table. The Forestry Commission does not keep records of the number of trees actually felled after licences have been issued.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

MOX Shipments

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the countries to which plutonium MOX fuel made at Sellafield's MDF Plant has been exported and the dates of export; and in which cases and on what dates the recipient countries have requested the return of a fuel pin or rod on grounds of safety or inadequate quality control. [112351]

Mrs. Liddell: I understand from BNFL that MOX fuel was exported from Sellafield to Germany in October 1996. Similar transports to Switzerland were undertaken in November 1995 and August 1997. As regards requests for any fuel to be returned to the UK, the position in respect of Switzerland was set out in my Answer to my hon. Friend of 25 January 2000, Official Report, columns 194–95W. As regards Japan, the shipment departed Europe in July 1999. Earlier this year the Ministry of International Trade and Industry asked that fuel delivered by BNFL to Kansai Electric's Takahama reactor should be returned to the UK. The Japanese and UK Governments are to discuss this further, along with other options for the fuel.

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what reports he has received regarding the falsification and manipulation of fuel quality control data in respect of BNFL MOX fuel supplied to Switzerland; and if he will make a statement. [106711]

Mrs. Liddell [pursuant to her reply, 14 February 2000, c. 366W]: My Answer referred to certain BNFL fuel pellets supplied to Switzerland in February 1997. This was incorrect. The pellets were in fact manufactured at that time and supplied in August 1997. The rest of the Answer remains correct.

End of Life Vehicles Directive

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement on the decision by the European Parliament to amend the proposed Directive on End of Life Vehicles to require car manufacturers to pay for the recycling of used cars when they reach the end of their lives; [113541]

(2) what representations he has made to the European Parliament regarding their decision to amend the proposed Directive on End of Life Vehicles to require car manufacturers to pay for the recycling of used cars. [113542]

Ms Hewitt: In its Second Reading on this Directive, the European Parliament has put forward a number of amendments, none of which have the effect described by the hon. Member. The Commission's proposal of December 1997 required manufacturers to pay for the recycling of used cars. Following pressure from the UK and some other member states, the Council Common Position provides member states with greater flexibility, simply requiring them to ensure that producers make at least a significant contribution to the costs of free take-back of end of life vehicles. The European Parliament has not proposed a change to this wording, although it has proposed a change to the dates from which it will apply, and the vehicles to which it will apply. Conciliation between the Council and Parliament now seems likely. On this particular issue, the UK will aim to secure flexibility for member states in deciding how best to organise free take-back and recycling.

New Cars

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will publish the findings of the Competition Commission's inquiry into the supply of new cars. [113362]

Mr. Byers: I will publish the Competition Commission report on the supply of new cars as quickly as is consistent with my legal obligations.

Ilisu Dam

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received concerning alternative developments to the Ilisu Dam to provide energy for Turkey; and if he will make a statement. [112829]

Mr. Caborn [holding answer 6 March 2000]: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I have received a great deal of correspondence regarding the Ilisu project, and this correspondence has included many assertions that various alternatives to the project should be considered.

I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Aberdeen, North (Mr. Savidge) on 3 March 2000, Official Report, column 423W.

It is for the project sponsor to consider the comparative risks, costs and benefits of alternatives to a particular project. Turkey needs to expand its generating capacity considerably. We know that they are looking at coal, gas and oil fired stations elsewhere in Turkey and also at nuclear power. It is natural that they should see hydro power—a clean, renewable energy source which does not involve imports—as having a place in meeting this need.

Social Enterprise Sector

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he has initiated since the publication of the Social Exclusion Unit Policy Action Team 3 report on Enterprise and Social Exclusion (A National Strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal) to improve support for, and to promote, the social enterprise sector; and if he will make a statement. [113451]

Mr. Byers: Since the publication of the Policy Action Team's report on Enterprise and Social Exclusion, my Department has taken a number of steps to improve the support for start-ups and existing small businesses, including social enterprises.

The SBS is currently exploring ways of encouraging Business Links to provide support to social enterprises, for example through:

The development of a webpage jointly with the British Bankers Association for business advisers and bankers to widen their understanding of social enterprises and their business needs. This will be linked to BBA website and SBS Gateway. It will be available from the autumn and will be updated regularly.

The SBS will be involved in a study trip to Valencia in Spain in April, led by Social Enterprise London, to look at co-operatives and other forms of social enterprises. The SBS will be disseminating the outcome of this work widely.

In January this year, I published "The Small Business Service: Summary of Consultation Replies and the Government's Response". One of the overarching aims this set out for the SBS was that it would help promote enterprise across society and particularly in disadvantaged communities.

Entrepreneurs and social enterprises in deprived areas can find it difficult to obtain finance to get their ideas off the ground. We therefore launched the Phoenix Fund in November last year with a key objective to support the provision of community finance. In this context we are working closely with the UK Social Investment Forum and Community Finance Initiatives to design ways in which we can support lending to entrepreneurs and social enterprises in the deprived areas. We hope to be able to announce the form that support will take later in the spring. We will continue to work with banks to highlight social exclusion as an issue and agree new ways forward.

We have contracted with the National Federation of Enterprise Agencies to run a pilot Business Volunteer Mentoring Association scheme until March 2001. This aims to recruit 1,000 volunteers from all sections of the business community, and from a diversity of backgrounds, to provide free mentoring advice to pre and early start up businesses, including from deprived communities. If the pilot is successful, it will be incorporated within the services provided by the Small Business Service.

My Department is also supporting the National Enterprise Campaign, to be launched this spring, which will encourage enterprise and help develop entrepreneurial skills throughout the UK, including the social enterprise sector.

Finally I am pleased to announce that the Prime Minister has agreed that the Minister for Competition and Consumer Affairs will take on additional responsibilities on corporate social responsibility, as recommended by the Policy Action Team. As Minister for Corporate Social Responsibility, he will be seeking to promote the business case for corporate social responsibility and to develop stronger links between different Government Departments' work in this area.

Renewable Energy

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the contribution of tidal barrages to meeting the Government's 10 per cent. target for renewable energy; and if he will make a statement. [113135]

Mrs. Liddell: Under the Government's policy on renewables the choice of technology to meet future targets will be left largely to the industry. The assessment undertaken for the Government's consultation document on renewables "New and Renewable Energy: Prospects for the 21 Century—Supporting Analysis" did not lead us to expect a significant contribution from tidal barrages in meeting current targets.

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what action he is taking to encourage the promotion of renewable energy; and if he will make a statement. [113056]

Mrs. Liddell: The Government published their new policy on renewables in February in their report "New and Renewable Energy, Prospects for the 21 Century: Conclusions in response to the Public Consultation". The Government will promote renewables in a number of ways. For example:

we have recently announced our intention to take powers in the Utilities Bill to place an Obligation on licensed suppliers of electricity to provide a specified proportion of electricity from renewable energy sources. This will provide a very substantial boost to the provision of renewable energy.

we have exempted electricity and heat from renewable sources from the Climate Change Levy, giving industry a financial incentive to use more renewable energy.

we are developing a regional approach to renewable energy planning and targets to facilitate renewables developments while continuing to protect the countryside.

we are developing a growing supporting programme of research, development, demonstration and dissemination in renewables which is expected to include a marketing campaign to raise public awareness of renewable energy.

Austria

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 50W, on Austria, what is the intended effect of the agreed bilateral measures to which he referred. [113022]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 3 March 2000]: The effect of the agreed bilateral measures is that there will be no bilateral ministerial visits to or from Austria. Along with our other EU partners, the UK will not support Austrian candidates for positions at international organisations.

End-user Certificates (Africa)

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the dates on which end-user certification of exports were granted in 1998 and the scope of the certificates to countries involved in the conflict in the Democratic Republic of Congo relating to (a) four-wheel drive and armoured vehicles sold to Angola, (b) military cargo vehicles to Uganda and (c)(i) military vehicles, (ii) combat aircraft and (iii) their components sold to Zimbabwe. [112701]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 6 March 2000]: As part of the process of assessing all applications for a licence to export arms or other goods on the Military List (Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994), including the goods referred to, exporters are required to supply information on the intended end-use and appropriate undertakings by the end-user concerned. Moreover, end-use certificates are not "granted" as part of the export licensing process. There is no process of "certification" as such but additional assurances are sought if this is considered necessary.

All such applications are of course considered against the criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29W and, since June 1998, the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports.

Mr. Cummings: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many beneficiaries were drawing pensions from the mineworkers pension schemes BC SSS and the MPS in (a) 1994, (b) 1995, (c)1996, (d) 1997, (e) 1998 and (f) 1999. [112986]

Mrs. Liddell: These are matters for the Trustees of the coal pension schemes. I have asked them to write to you direct.

Funding Schemes

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the funding schemes administered by his Department, indicating the total funds of each scheme and the administration costs of each scheme as a percentage of the total funds. [112496]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 2 March 2000]: A detailed breakdown of the Department's activities is given in the annual Expenditure Plans Reports Trade and Industry: "The Government's Expenditure Plans (Cm 3905, Cm 3605, Cm 4211), published by the Stationery Office Limited". Information relating administration costs to programme expenditure is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, using information drawn from the 1998–99 Shadow Resource Accounts for the Department, the total cost of departmental objectives and the percentage that relates to administration costs are as follows:

Objective	Total (£000)	Administration costs (£000)	Percentage
Promote enterprise, innovation and increased productivity	795,886	168,642	21
Make the most of the UK's science, engineering and technology	1,332,486	29,403	2
Create strong and competitive markets	2,231,674	32,637	1
Develop a fair and effective legal and regulatory framework	366,173	149,136	41
Total	4,726,219	379,818	8

RDX Exports

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what decisions have been taken on the applications that were pending in November 1999 for the export of RDX in its raw form to Oman, Spain, Turkey and the USA. [112938]

Dr. Howells: Licences were issued in respect of the applications covering the export of RDX in its raw form to Spain and the United States of America on 9 December 1999 and 23 December 1999 respectively. A decision has not yet been taken on the other applications concerned.

All applications for licences to export arms and other goods entered in Part III of Schedule 1 to the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994, commonly known as the Military List, are assessed against the criteria announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on 28 July 1997, Official Report, columns 26–29W, and, since June 1998 the EU Code of Conduct on Arms Exports.

Kensington Mortgage Company

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with the relevant local trading standards offices concerning the activities of the Kensington Mortgage Company. [112783]

Dr. Howells: I have had no such discussions.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will order an inquiry into the lending practices of the Kensington Mortgage Company; [112782]

(2) if he will make it his policy to investigate the activities of non-status lenders in the mortgage lending sector. [112781]

Dr. Howells: Most non-status lenders hold consumer credit licences issued by the Director General of Fair Trading. The Director monitors the continuing fitness of licence holders. He also monitors lenders' and brokers' compliance with his guidelines on non-status lending.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent discussions he has had with the Council of Mortgage Lenders concerning the (a) commissions, (b) penalties and (c) other charges made by the Kensington Mortgage Company. [112779]

Dr. Howells: None.

Mortgage Sector

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to protect vulnerable consumers from high levels of commission rates charged by non-status lenders in the mortgage sector. [112778]

Dr. Howells: The Office of Fair Trading published guidelines for lenders and brokers in the non-status market in 1997 include guidance on lenders commission structure and disclosure of brokerage and other fees payable by the borrower. The Director General of Fair Trading has indicated that lenders and brokers who do not comply with the guidelines risk licensing action under the Consumer Credit Act 1974.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what protection his Department provides to mortgagees in respect of the penal rates charged to consumers by mortgage lenders who fall behind in their payments. [112777]

Dr. Howells: If a mortgage loan is a regulated agreement under the Consumer Credit Act 1974, the lender cannot charge interest on arrears, when the borrower defaults, at a rate which exceeds the contractual rate of interest. The Act also contains provisions, not restricted to regulated agreements, which enable consumers to apply to the courts to have their credit bargains re-opened if they are extortionate. One of the factors the courts can take into account when considering whether a credit bargain is extortionate is prevailing interest rates at the time the agreement was made. Among other remedies, the court is able to alter the terms of the credit agreement or order the creditor to repay sums paid under the agreement to the borrower.

The Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 provide that terms in standard form consumer contracts (other than terms about price or the subject matter of the contract) are not binding if they are unfair, and enable the Director General of Fair Trading and others to bring injunction proceedings before the courts.

Mr. Sheerman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what guidance his Department gives to mortgage lenders on appropriate levels of charges to their customers. [112780]

Dr. Howells: None. However, the Director General of Fair Trading's guidelines for non-status lenders and brokers require charges on default to be reasonable and do no more than cover the lender's administrative costs. The Director General has also issued guidelines under the Unfair Terms in Consumer Contracts Regulations 1999 which say that it is unacceptable for lenders to vary interest rates at will unless consumers can end the contract immediately and without penalty.

Miners (Compensation)

Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the total payments made to date to each firm of solicitors in South Wales involved in the compensation claims for (a) chest disease and (b) vibration white finger. [112480]

Mrs. Liddell: Payments to firms in South Wales to date are as follows:

Cashpoint Machines

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what powers he has (a) to stop and (b) to regulate the application of charges for the use of ATM cash points in the LINK system. [113181]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 March 2000]: Under the new Competition Act the Director General of Fair Trading can investigate whether the LINK agreement on surcharges is in any way anti-competitive and he now has powers to impose severe penalties for infringements of the prohibitions of the Act.

Section 4 of the Prices Act 1974 gives me powers to make an Order requiring that charges are indicated for goods and services. If the banking industry does not reach a satisfactory voluntary agreement on the display of charges I will use my powers to require them to display prices transparently before the transaction takes place.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

London Underground

18. Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last travelled on official business on the London Underground. [112190]

Mr. Hill: My right hon. Friend travels by public transport on a regular basis on official visits and on journeys to his office.

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will call for a report from London Underground on (a) the reasons for the work on the second escalator at St. John's Wood Station taking longer than originally assumed, (b) when Baker Street Station will be re-opened for Jubilee Line passengers and (c) the reasons why at Westminster Station debris obstructs the walkway to the House, certain exits have not opened and the previously opened exit to Victoria Embankment has been boarded shut. [113126]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 March 2000]: These are operational matters for London Underground who have informed me that:

(a) The escalator at St. John's Wood is being refurbished and this work was originally due to be completed by May 2000. However, during the process of removing parts of the escalator, a problem with water ingress was discovered. Work on the refurbishment had to be suspended while this was investigated and dealt with, but is now progressing again and the escalator is scheduled to return to service in late June 2000.

(b) Baker Street Station re-opened for Jubilee Line passengers on 3 March 2000 but closed to Jubilee passengers over the weekend of the 4–5 March due to a failed speed governor (a device which ensures that the escalator travels at a steady speed, controls the braking system and ensures that it comes to a controlled stop in an emergency). It re-opened this morning to the Jubilee Line passengers; and

(c) Part of the Bridge subway at Westminster Station remains fenced off to allow contractors to complete installation of permanent lighting there; the final subway exit, linking the station to Victoria Embankment, adjacent to Westminster Pier, opened on 6 March 2000, although the staircase at the pier end of the Subway is not due to open until 31 March 2000; those exits previously opened and now shut have been closed to facilitate construction works at street level by the New Parliamentary Building team.

Council Tenants

19. Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the progress made in giving council tenants a greater role in running their own estates. [112191]

Mr. Raynsford: The introduction of best value and tenant participation compacts from 1 April 2000 will ensure that tenants can influence the way their homes are managed. Tenants can choose how and in what they are involved and this will be set out in the compact with their authority. Our new tenant empowerment grant programme, which I will launch on 31 March also helps tenants to get independent advice on options for involvement, including tenant management if they wish.

Council Housing (Inner London)

20. Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has to encourage the building of council-owned homes in inner London. [112192]

Mr. Mullin: We are keen to encourage the building of the maximum number of affordable homes in Inner London by whatever means secures the best value for money. However, in most cases housing associations are able to build twice as many units than local authorities would have been able to do for the same amount of grant.

Regional Development Agencies

21. Mr. Fraser: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the cost to public funds of regional development agencies. [112193]

Ms Armstrong: The eight RDAs in England have a total budget of £900 million for 1999–2000. This comprises grant-in-aid of £737 million and retention of receipts from programmes.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what are the names and addresses of the members of the boards of each of the regional development agencies who have rural expertise. [112819]

Ms Armstrong: Members are not appointed to represent a particular sector, but in a personal capacity. Members typically have experiences and skills across a range of sectors and interests. The table shows both the names of those board members taking the lead on rural issues and the names of other members who also have some expertise in this area. The address of the RDA where board members can be contacted is also given.

EU Structural Funds

22. Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of his Department's contribution to the future programmes of European Union objective 1 regions. [112194]

Ms Armstrong: My Department will continue to provide significant financial support to the new objective 1 regions through a wide variety of routes. These include the funds made available to the Regional Development Agencies; regeneration programmes such as the New Deal for Communities, as well as the resources provided to local authorities.

Integrated Transport Commission

23. Dr. Whitehead: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Commission for Integrated Transport. [112195]

Mr. Hill: We are very grateful to the Commission for Integrated Transport for all the valuable work it has been doing, which continues to make a real contribution to the transport debate.

Regeneration

24. Ms Rosie Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to regenerate disadvantaged communities. [112196]

Ms Armstrong: A framework version of our national strategy for the regeneration of deprived communities will be published in the spring, with a final version emerging later in the year. Meantime, new ideas, new approaches and existing best practice are already being identified with our New Deal for Communities and other regeneration partnerships across the country.

26. Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to regenerate the economy in the north-west. [112198]

Ms Armstrong: This Government are taking many steps to regenerate the economy of the north west, including the establishment of the North West development agency to deliver the regional strategy. This includes the single regeneration budget which in round five alone is worth over £800 million.

Best Value

25. Mr. Neil Turner: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment his Department has made of the steps taken by local authorities to provide best value in their services. [112197]

Ms Armstrong: An interim evaluation of the 40 best value pilot authorities, carried out by the Warwick University Business School, was published on 22 November 1999. All the authorities found the best value framework worked, but was more challenging than they had expected. However, after only 12 months work, there were real examples of improved services and cost savings and real engagement with local people.

33. Mrs. Fiona Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the Best Value pilot schemes in the east midlands. [112205]

Ms Armstrong: An interim evaluation of all the best value pilot authorities, including those in the east midlands, was carried out by Warwick University Business School and published on 22 November 1999. All the authorities found the best value framework worked, but was more challenging than they had expected.

However, after only 12 months of work, there were real examples of improved services and cost savings and real engagement with local people.

Heavy Goods Vehicles

27. Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many foreign HGVs his Department inspected in each of the last three years. [112199]

Mr. Hill: Inspections of vehicles are carried out by the Vehicle Inspectorate in accordance with targets set for them by the Secretary of State.

The Vehicle Inspectorate undertook roadworthiness checks on 3,498 foreign vehicles in 1998–99 and 5,343 checks in 1997–98. Roadworthiness check statistics for 1996–97 are not available.

In addition the Vehicle Inspectorate completed traffic enforcement checks on 13,037 foreign vehicles in 1998–99 and in the preceding two years 13,288 and 12,821 checks respectively.

Urban Renewal

28. Mr. Geraint Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the Government's actions to promote urban renewal. [112200]

Ms Armstrong: The Government are committed to a comprehensive programme of urban renewal. We are currently preparing the first White Paper on urban policy for 20 years, which we aim to publish later this year. This will set out a comprehensive set of policies to achieve an urban renaissance.

Disabled People (Transport Access)

29. Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps the Government are taking to improve access for disabled people to transport services. [112201]

Mr. Hill: The Government are committed to comprehensive civil rights for disabled people. Accessible public transport, within the framework of an integrated transport policy, is fundamentally important to delivering that commitment.

We have already brought forward regulations under the Disability Discrimination Act setting detailed technical access standards for all new trains. This year we will be bringing forward similar regulations applying to buses and coaches and we will be consulting on proposed regulations applying to buses and coaches and we will be consulting on proposed regulations for taxis. These regulations cover facilities for wheelchair users and for people with a wide range of other disabilities.

Through the Local Transport Plans we are also ensuring that local authorities give due weight to the needs of disabled people across the whole spectrum of their responsibilities, including pedestrian facilities, transport infrastructure and voluntary and community transport services.

Light Rail Services

30. Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on light rail services. [112202]

Mr. Hill: Light rail, and similar rapid transit systems, can have an important role to play in delivering integrated transport in major conurbations. Experience from existing light rail schemes has shown that they can be effective in providing a high quality public transport option in densely used transport corridors and in encouraging motorists to switch from their cars. However, the capital costs of light rail schemes are high compared with bus priority measures and guided bus schemes, which may offer a more cost-effective alternative. Central Government support can be provided to local authorities to fund light rail systems where these bring net benefits which are greater than those offered by the available alternatives; cannot be entirely funded from local sources or by the private sector; provide good value for money and are essential to the achievement of the objectives of the relevant authority's local transport plan.

Standard Spending Assessment

31. Mr. Watts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on his Department's review of the local government standard spending assessment system. [112203]

Ms Armstrong: Central and local Government officials have been discussing a wide range of options for improving the method of revenue grant distribution. Their joint report of the issues raised in the review will be put to the Central Local Partnership later this month and published on the internet.

Decisions about the merits of the various options for reform will be made when we have responses to a consultation paper that we expect to publish in the summer.

Emissions Trading

32. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the role of emissions trading in limiting global carbon dioxide emissions. [112204]

Mr. Meacher: The Kyoto agreement was an historic achievement—setting legally binding emission targets for developed countries for the first time. The agreement also provides for international emissions trading to help countries meet these challenging targets. I believe that this system will help countries meet their commitments cost-effectively, with real environmental benefits. Since June last year, the Government have been working with business to develop a trading scheme in the UK, as part of our strategy for meeting our climate change commitments.

Rail Safety

34. Mr. Salter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on measures taken to improve rail safety following the Paddington rail crash in October 1999. [112206]

Mr. Hill: I refer my hon. Friend to the Deputy Prime Minister's statement in the House on 22 February 2000, Official Report, columns 1373–84.

39. Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last had a meeting with Railtrack to discuss safety on the railways. [112211]

Mr. Hill: Ministers and officials meet Railtrack regularly to discuss a number of railway issues including railway safety.

Recycling

35. Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress in his policies to encourage recycling. [112207]

Mr. Meacher: The Government are committed to increasing recycling substantially from the current low levels. We set ambitious goals in the draft waste strategy, "A Way with Waste", including to recycle 25 per cent. of household waste by 2005. The final version of the strategy, to be published soon, will put in place a range of instruments for delivering these goals.

In Wales and Scotland recycling policy is a matter for the National Assembly or Scottish Parliament respectively.

Quango Accountability

36. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the accountability of quangos based in Yorkshire and Humberside to the people of that region. [112208]

Ms Armstrong: The Government regularly review the accountability of Non-Departmental Public Bodies to the Public through the Public Accounts Committee and the National Audit Office.

Business Rates

37. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent representations he has received regarding the level of business rates for small businesses. [112209]

Ms Armstrong: I have received representations from small businesses welcoming the transitional relief scheme announced on 25 November and calling for a rate relief scheme for small businesses.

The transitional relief scheme, which favours small businesses, will phase in significant changes in rate bills resulting from the revaluation on 1 April. In addition many small businesses will benefit from the revaluation itself and the reduction in the multiplier to 41.6p for every £1 of rateable value.

We set out a possible rate relief scheme for small businesses in our White Paper, "Modern Local Government: In Touch with the People" (1998). We have discussed this scheme with representatives of small businesses, and we aim next to hold a public consultation exercise on the details of the scheme.

Rail Investment

38. Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent discussions he has had with representatives of the railway industry about investment in the railway infrastructure and in train services in Worcestershire; and if he will make a statement. [112210]

Mr. Hill: A report was commissioned to consider improvements in rail routes radiating from Worcester and the shadow Strategic Rail Authority (sSRA) will be discussing this report with interested stakeholders this month. The sSRA has discussed a number of improvements in the railway infrastructure in Worcestershire with Railtrack and details of these will be included in Railtrack's Network Management Statement which is to be published at the end of the month.

Train Reliability

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he last met representatives of the Association of Train Operating Companies to discuss train reliability and punctuality. [112177]

Mr. Prescott: I met ATOC in November 1998 and agreed an action plan for short-term improvements in performance across the railway network. At the National Rail Summit in February 1999, I announced a number of longer-term initiatives based on the establishment of the shadow Strategic Rail Authority. I will be discussing progress on the industry 10-point plan, which covered train safety, reliability and punctuality, with ATOC and Railtrack at the next National Rail Summit in May.

Pymmes Park

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made in resolving the outstanding claims for compensation relating to the compulsory purchase of land at Pymmes Park as part of the A406 widening at Edmonton; what parts of the claim by the local authority have been accepted in principle by the Highways Agency; what issues remain outstanding; and if he will make a statement. [111981]

Mr. Hill: Compensation negotiations between the District Valuer, acting for the Highways Agency and the London Borough of Enfield are continuing. The Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Peter Nutt, will write to my hon. Friend with further details.

Letter from Mr. Peter Nutt to Mr. Andrew Love, dated 7 March 2000:

The Parliamentary Under Secretary of State, Keith Hill, has asked me to write in response to your recent written Parliamentary Question about compensation being claimed by the London Borough of Enfield for land acquired under compulsory purchase at Pymmes Parks as part of the widening of the A406 North Circular Road.

I explained in my letter of 8 December to you, that negotiations between the District Valuer, acting for the Highways Agency, and the London Borough of Enfield were continuing. Exchange land has already been provided to offset the loss of open space at Pymmes Park. The remaining heads of claim include the value of land as well as reasonable compensation for the loss of amenity and other damages to Pymmes Park.

The District Valuer wrote to the Council on 3 February, on our instruction, setting out the Agency's position but unfortunately was unable to offer unconditional settlement on any of the nine heads of claim. I appreciate that this does not represent the progress the Council wishes to see, and I too would be pleased to see all these matters brought to speedy, equitable and amicable conclusion. May I suggest that the best way forward is for officials from Highways Agency, supported by the District Valuer, to meet Council officials at Enfield? If you would like to take up this suggestion, your secretary could discuss arrangements by contacting Andrew Gallagher, the Highways Agency's Director for London on 0171–921–4306.

Lorries

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what appraisals his Department has undertaken of the time that lorries are delayed on congested motorways and trunk roads; if he intends to take action to reduce delays by lorries and other heavy vehicles; and if he will make a statement. [112705]

Mr. Hill: In preparation for our report, "Tackling Congestion and Pollution", published in January, we estimated the total amount of extra journey time (total vehicle hours spent travelling less those which would have been incurred at free flow speeds) resulting from congestion on English roads in 1996. By drawing on this analysis it is possible to estimate the proportion of the total amount of time lost by different kinds of vehicle on a range of road types. Although these techniques are not yet sufficiently well developed to allow a separate estimate to be produced for the trunk road network, estimates can be produced for motorways and A roads as a whole. These estimates suggest that, taken together, motorways and A roads outside urban areas accounted for some 12 per cent. of the total amount of time lost by heavy goods vehicles on English roads in 1996. This estimate includes only time lost due to general congestion and does not allow for time lost due to incidents or road works.

Our integrated transport White Paper set out a package of measures to tackle congestion and pollution, based on concerted action by local authorities, businesses, Government and the general public. We will continue to take this forward, including through the Transport Bill, and our 10-year plan to modernise Britain's transport system (to be published in the summer).

M25

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what estimates he has made of the cost of resurfacing the M25 in porous asphalt between junctions 8 and 9. [112542]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 2 March 2000]: I have asked the Chief Executive of the Highways Agency, Mr. Peter Nutt, to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Mr. Peter Nutt to Mr. Crispin Blunt, dated 7 March 2000]:

The Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions has asked me to reply to your question about the estimated cost of resurfacing the M25 between junctions 8 and 9 in porous asphalt, a distance of approximately 11km.

When I wrote to you on 28 February in response to your question about resurfacing the M25 between junctions 8 and 10 in porous asphalt our Agents initial estimate was given as £14m. That estimate was based on the assumption that no other work beyond a simple overlay of porous asphalt would be necessary. I regret that this assumption has proved incorrect in the light of further work.

A more detailed survey and analysis has ow been completed and has identified the need for additional works if an overlay is to be successfully applied. The existing concrete carriageway, consisting of a series of individual concrete slabs, would need additional work to stabilise it so that small movements in the joints between the slabs did not cause the overlay immediately above the joints to crack. Once cracks form in porous asphalt, the road surface disintegrates very quickly. The overlay would also have to be thicker for the same reason. The extra thickness of the overlay would also make it necessary to raise long lengths of safety fencing to maintain its effectiveness. All this would increase the time taken to complete the work and the costs of the associated traffic management.

Based upon this more detailed work, our estimate for the cost of resurfacing the M25 between junctions 8 and 9 with porous asphalt is around £18 million, with our estimate for applying it between junctions 8 and 10 now being £34 million. I am sorry for supplying information previously which was so misleading.

Should you require further information, please contact the Highways Agency's Area 3 Team Leader, John Rylett, in our Dorking office on 01306 878251.

Lead Water Pipes

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he is taking to replace lead water pipes; and if he will make a statement. [112815]

Mr. Mullin: The new Drinking Water Directive (98/83/EC) tightens the standard for lead in drinking water from its current 50µg/to 25µg/1 by 25 December 2003 and to 10µg/1 by 25 December 2013. Where action is necessary to meet these standards, water companies will first treat water to reduce its ability to dissolve lead from pipes, or will optimise that treatment where it is already in place. Replacement of company lead pipes will be needed where water treatment fails to achieve the standards—mainly soft-water areas. This will become fully apparent only after optimised treatment has been in place for some months. Pipework within the property boundary will remain the responsibility of the property owner. Local authorities have discretionary powers to pay grants to help homeowners to replace lead piping in their properties.

Residential Leasehold Property

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans has he to introduce legislation on residential leasehold property; and if he will make a statement. [113428]

Mr. Mullin: As was announced in the Gracious Speech on 17 November 1999, Official Report, columns 04–07, we intend to publish a draft Commonhold and Leasehold Reform Bill for consultation during this session. My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Housing, Planning and Construction announced on 20 December 1999, Official Report, column 345W, the publication of a summary of the main leasehold measures we intend to include in the draft Bill. Copies were placed in the Library. Following consultation on the draft Bill, we intend to bring forward legislation as soon as parliamentary time allows.

Solar Radiation

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what provision he has made for the monitoring of the effects of increase solar radiation on satellite and mobile communications systems that are required for the safety of airlines and ships at sea; and if he will make a statement. [113109]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The Rutherford Appleton Laboratory is conducting research into the effects of solar radiation on satellite and other communications equipment. It also issues warnings when it is predicted that solar flares and other solar events are likely to affect communications equipment.

Neither the Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) nor the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) is specifically monitoring the effects of increases in solar radiation on radio communications. However, any incidents which affect the safety of any aircraft in UK airspace or a UK registered aircraft will be reported to the CAA. This would include incidents caused by solar radiation interfering with radio communications.

Special Advisers

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many special advisers are employed in his Department; and how many were employed on 1 May 1997. [113107]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The Department currently employs five special advisers; three are full-time and two part-time. On 1 February 1997 the Department of the Environment employed four special advisers, two full-time and two part-time. The Department of Transport employed one full-time special adviser on this date.

By 1 May 1997 two special advisers had resigned leaving the Department of the Environment with three special advisers, one full-time and two part-time and none in the Department of Transport.

Methyl Tertiary Butyl Ether

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 1 March 2000, Official Report, column 282W, concerning MTBE, what contribution has been made by oil companies to the Environment Agency's research project on the incidence of MTBE in England and Wales; if he will publish the results when available; and what assessment he has made of the possible carcinogenicity of MTBE. [113543]

Mr. Mullin: The current Environment Agency project on MTBE incidence in England and Wales has received valuable financial and other assistance from major oil companies through the Institute of Petroleum. The results of the research, which forms part of a wider investigation into the fate and transport of chemicals in the sub-surface, will be made available by the Environment Agency. US work suggests that the carcinogenicity risk of MTBE is very small at the levels currently found. The toxicity and carcinogenicity of fuel ethers is, however, currently the subject of a major review by the Finnish Environment Agency on behalf of the European Environment Agency. A draft report is expected this spring.

Wandsworth (Planning)

Mr. Colman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce the result of the review of the London Borough of Wandsworth's planning application approval for the development of the site of the Old Wandsworth Secondary School, Sutherland Grove, London SW15, for educational and residential purposes. [113450]

Mr. Raynsford: The conservation area consent decision will be announced very soon.

Vehicle Registration

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what claims there have been for compensation from motor dealers as a result of difficulties in issuing registration documents for new motor vehicles at DVLA. [113525]

Mr. Hill: There have been no claims for compensation from motor dealers related to the issuing of registration documents for the DVLA.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what difficulties were experienced with DVLA systems in relation to the registration of V registration vehicles; what the (a) cause and (b) effects were of such problems; what measures were taken to rectify them; and at what cost. [113524]

Mr. Hill: 'V' registration marks were introduced on 1 September 1999 and were superseded by 'W' marks on 1 March 2000.

Over 50 per cent. of vehicles are now registered through the Automated First Registration and the Licensing facility (AFRL) which allows motor dealers to register and first license vehicles electronically. All other vehicles are registered through the established network of Vehicle Registration Offices (VROs).

In recent years the DVLA has consistently met or bettered its published target of issuing registration documents to customers within 12 working days. No significant difficulties have been experienced.

Driver Safety

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what measures he will take to improve the safety of drivers who make journeys by motor vehicles on behalf of their employers. [113528]

Mr. Hill: Measures to improve work-related road safety are set out in the Government's road safety strategy—"Tomorrow's roads: safer for everyone", published on 1 March.

We want to ensure that worker/drivers and vulnerable road users are not exposed to unnecessary risks. An inter-agency task group is therefore being established under an independent chair—Richard Dykes, Group Managing Director of the Post Office. The group will make recommendations for action on strategies for improving the management of work-related road safety.

Road Safety

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has for prime time advertising on television to support the objective of his road safety strategy. [113521]

Mr. Hill: Well researched advertising on television will play a key role in supporting the objectives of our road safety strategy. The Department is currently considering options for a high profile campaign led by television advertising to be launched soon with the aim of bringing home to all the importance of safer road behaviour and the part that everyone can play in reducing deaths and injuries.

The Department has a long history of using television advertising as the focus of powerful and effective campaigns, well founded on research into what will work and thoroughly and independently monitored as to effectiveness.

Television will provide us in the coming year with the opportunity to raise the profile of road safety as an issue and to get across specific messages about child road safety, speed, drink driving, seat belt wearing and the range of other issues outlined in the indicative programme published in the strategy paper, "Tomorrow's roads: safer for everyone".

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions (1) what plans he has to set casualty reduction targets for (a) pedestrians, (b) cyclists and (c) motorcyclists; [113519]

(2) what special measures he proposes to reduce accidents among (a) pedestrians, (b) cyclists and (c) motorcyclists. [113520]

Mr. Hill: The Government's new Road Safety Strategy, "Tomorrow's roads: safer for everyone", was launched by the Prime Minister on 1 March. It sets a new target to reduce the number of people killed and seriously injured on the roads by 40 per cent. by the year 2010, a separate target of 50 per cent. for children, and a 10 per cent. reduction in the slight casualty rate. No targets have been set for specific groups but paragraph 9.13 commits us to considering with the Road Safety Advisory Board, rate based targets for cyclists and walkers.

Special measures for these groups are detailed in chapters eight and nine of the strategy, but measures described elsewhere, particularly our driver training, will be to their benefit.

Copies of "Tomorrow's roads: safer for everyone" are in the Library and the Vote Office.

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what the total cost was of the launch event for the Government's road safety strategy; and what was the breakdown of the costs, including the cost of the (i) videos and films, (ii) stage backdrop, (iii) hire of the premises, (iv) expenses provided for the schoolchildren who participated in the event, (v) sound systems, (vi) issue of invitations, (vii) hospitality and (viii) other costs. [113526]

Mr. Hill: The total cost of the event to launch the road safety strategy on 1 March is estimated at £16,800 including VAT where applicable (some minor costs are not yet known).

A breakdown of costs by category is given in the table.

Category	£	Detail
Videos and films	4,300	We plan to use both videos and films on at least three other occasions
Stage backdrop	6,800	Some of the stage set will be re-used at other events
Hire of premises	2,100	—
Expenses for school children; issue of invitations; hospitality	600	Of the 15 school children, nine came from a local school and were issued by DETR staff; hospitality for about 120 delegates
Sound system	1,200	The sound system was provided by the venue
Other costs	1,800	Photographer delegate expenses items for the children and minor work on site

Drink-drive Limit

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he expects the EU Council of Ministers to decide on a proposal to harmonise the drink-drive limit in the EU. [113527]

Mr. Hill: The Government expect the European Commission to publish its proposals in respect of blood alcohol limits for drivers shortly, as indicated in its road safety strategy "Tomorrow's Roads—Safer for Everyone", published on 1 March.

Hull Road Scheme

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reason the case for the road scheme in Hull is included in his Department's appraisal tables in the category of jobs and prosperity rather than that of safety and healthier communities; and if he will make a statement. [113522]

Mr. Hill: The main reasons we included the A1033 Hedon Road Improvement in our programme were to relieve congestion and delays on the main access route to the port of Hull and to assist regeneration. Hence the jobs and prosperity classification for the scheme in "A New Deal for Trunk Roads in England. The New Approach to Appraisal" assessment shows that time savings are the scheme's main benefit, but it will also enhance road safety through improving junction layouts and create a safer environment for pedestrian and cyclists, including provision of a dedicated cycleway.

Rail Summit

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he next intends to hold a rail summit. [113518]

Mr. Hill: It is currently planned to hold the next Rail Summit in May this year.

Coal Fields (Regeneration)

Mr. Todd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps are being taken to regenerate former coal field areas. [112179]

Ms Beverley Hughes: I refer my hon. Friend to my answer of 11 January 2000, Official Report, columns 112–13W.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Lottery

Mr. Ruane: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the (a) amount of money raised from the sale of lottery tickets, and (b) the amount of lottery money spent, in each constituency, ranked in descending order of lottery money spent. [113276]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 6 March 2000]: I have placed in the Libraries of the House a table to show the amount of money raised from lottery ticket sales per UK constituency in descending order since the beginning of the lottery (correct to 13 November 1999), and a table to show the award amount to each UK constituency in descending order since the beginning of the lottery (correct to 3 March 2000). This information is taken from the National Lottery Awards database which uses information supplied by the lottery distributing bodies. The tables include lottery awards not attributed to the distributing bodies to a particular constituency. The constituency information relates to the address to which the lottery award was sent.

Television Licences

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what will be the cost of administering the free television licence scheme in 2000–01; and how the cost is to be funded. [113130]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 6 March 2000]: Estimates of the cost of administering free television licences for people aged 75 or over have still to be finalised. The cost will be met from public funds, via a payment from the Department of Social Security to the BBC.

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of the number of families in Barnsley East and Mexborough who will benefit from the introduction of free TV licences for households with a member aged 75 years or over. [112980]

Janet Anderson: This information is not available. 1991 Census information is out of date and no household survey has a sample size sufficient to make reliable estimates of qualifying households at a constituency or local authority level.

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his estimate of the (a) number and (b) percentage of households in (i) Northern Ireland, (ii) Wales (iii) Scotland and (iv) England that are evading payment of the television licence fee. [113024]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 3 March 2000]: The BBC, as Licensing Authority, estimates evasion principally on a UK-wide basis and estimates of evasion by country cannot be produced on the same basis or to the same level of accuracy. All estimates relate to licensable premises rather than households. As at 31 March 1999, the latest date for which figures are available, the estimated evasion figures were:

	(a) Estimated evasion (number of licensable premises) [1]	(b) Estimated evasion (percentage)
Northern Ireland	148,000	24.2
Wales	93,000	7.7
England	957,000	4.9

[1] Estimates calculated by applying the estimated percentage evasion rate to the estimated number of licensable premises

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if a household exempt from having to pay for a television licence from November by virtue of including a pensioner aged 75 years or over will be required to hold a licence document. [113020]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 3 March 2000]: Yes. The provision of free television licences for people aged 75 or over will be a concession, not an exemption from the television licensing requirements. This will preserve the traditional structure of the television licensing system which is one of the safeguards of the BBC's independence.

UK Sport and UK Sports Institute

Mr. Allan: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what representations he has received concerning the future location of the headquarters of UK Sport and the UK Sports Institute. [112762]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 6 March 2000]: DCMS has received a number of representations from interested parties, including local Sheffield Members of Parliament, Phoenix Sports Ltd., University of Sheffield, Sheffield Hallam University and the Institute of Directors (South Yorkshire Branch), about the UK Sports Institute headquarters. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I discussed the location of the UK Sports Institute's headquarters with my right hon. Friend the Member for Sheffield, Central (Mr. Caborn) and other representatives from Sheffield on 23 November.

My Department has not received any specific representations regarding the relocation of UK Sport.

British Library

Mr. Gordon Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what progress has been made on the British Library review. [113638]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have today published the report on prior options, the first stage of the Review of the British Library.

The report examines the role and functions of the British Library, and how these functions contribute to the delivery of wider DCMS and Government objectives. It confirms that at the present time the library's status as a non-departmental public body is the best option for delivering its services and considers how the delivery of its services might be improved in the future.

The publication of the prior options report marks the end of the first stage of the Review. The second stage will take forward the recommendations of the prior options stage and consider how the library's services and functions could be provided more efficiently and effectively in the future.

A copy of the prior options report has been placed in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Dome

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is the cash value of each of the six short-listed bids to take over the Millennium Dome site. [111417]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 22 February 2000]: The six short-listed bids, announced on 17 January, were selected on their ability to deliver a world class, sustainable future use for the Dome at Greenwich. Detailed financial appraisals of the bids were not required for this stage of the competition. The six bidders are required to submit indicative financial offers, with further details of their proposals, by 31 March 2000.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what sum of additional interest payments and other expenses has been incurred on a result of the late payment of sponsorship money to the Millennium Dome; and what the cost to the Millennium Commission has been. [109969]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 14 February 2000]: The New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) has not to date incurred interest as a result of delays in the payment of sponsorship money. There have therefore been no additional costs to the Millennium Commission.

Mr. Yeo: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 10 February 2000, Official Report, column 237W, on the Millennium Dome, for what reason he did not list the foods sold in relation to standards of food produced in the United Kingdom as opposed to standards required of catering and food outlets. [112314]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 28 February 2000]: All catering and food outlets in the Millennium Dome are subject to the same strict controls and checks that apply to all commercial catering and food outlets in the UK. This applies to all aspects of their operation including the food that they serve. In all instances there is a clear chain from food source, via suppliers, to the specific outlet at the Dome. All NMEC's suppliers endeavour to meet all current Health, Hygiene and Safety regulations.

Broadcasting

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport, pursuant to his answer of 16 February 2000, Official Report, column 545W, on broadcasting, if he will make a statement on the views expressed by the European Commission in respect of (a) News 24 and (b) future funding options for the BBC. [111900]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 1 March 2000]: The views of the European Commission on BBC News 24 were set out in the Commission's decision on the complaint by BSkyB. The Government welcomed the Commission's decision that licence fee funding dedicated to BBC News 24 is compatible with the Treaty rules. The Government did not, however, agree with the finding that the licence fee funding of BBC News 24 ought to have been notified to the Commission and noted that the finding in relation to notification was not determinative to the decision and was not the subject of argument.

The Commission has not expressed a view on funding options for the BBC, though it has requested information on the digital licence fee proposed by the independent review panel chaired by Gavyn Davies.

Sport Employment Statistics

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what is his basis for estimating the number of people who are employed in sport; and if he will make a statement. [112639]

Kate Hoey: Research conducted by the Leisure Industries Research Centre at Sheffield/Sheffield Hallam Universities into the economic impact of sport in England and on behalf of Sport England, was published last month. It shows that employment in sport, including the commercial sector and central and local government, was 368,587 in 1998, an increase of over 20,000 on the 1995 figure, although the expanding employment market generally meant that the sports sector proportion of total employment fell from 1.64 per cent. to 1.59 per cent. These, and other figures contained within the report, provide further evidence of sport's existing and growing economic importance.

Internet

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps his Department is taking to use the Internet to promote sporting opportunities. [112954]

Kate Hoey: Our new site (www.culture.gov.uk) went live on Monday 28 February. It responds to public demands for a site which both outlines the role of Government within our areas of responsibility and guides browsers in the direction of a wide range of other sites, including Sport England and the United Kingdom Sports Council, to answer their many questions on cultural and sporting issues. The development of this portal site should encourage visitors to become regular users.

Digital Television

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimate he has made of when it will be possible to receive digital terrestrial transmissions in all parts of Pendle; and if he will make a statement. [113029]

Janet Anderson: Maps showing the predicted digital terrestrial television (DTT) coverage from each of the 81 UK DTT transmitter sites have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses on CD-ROM. These show that most of Pendle is covered by transmissions from the Pendle Forest DTT transmitter. These transmissions reach between 204,000 and 220,000 people. There are no current plans for additional DTT transmitters but the BBC and ITC, who are responsible for the transmission network, are now considering, in consultation with digital broadcasters, manufacturers, consumer groups and Government, how to improve the coverage of digital television across the UK.

Mr. Luff: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport (1) if he will list the post code areas of Worcestershire in which digital terrestrial television services are not currently available; [113067]

(2) what estimate he has made of (a) the percentage of households in Worcestershire that live in an area covered by digital terrestrial television signals and (b) when the signals will be available in all parts of the country. [113066]

Janet Anderson: The information is not available in the form requested. However, maps showing the predicted digital terrestrial television (DTT) coverage from each of the 81 individual transmitter sites in the UK have been placed in Libraries of both Houses on CD-ROM. The BBC and ITC, who are responsible for the DTT transmission network, are now considering, in consultation with digital broadcasters, manufacturers, consumer groups and Government, how to improve the coverage of digital television across the UK.

CABINET OFFICE

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Jenkins: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the Executive Non Departmental Public Bodies 1999 report and the Executive Agencies 1999 report. [113591]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government have today published the Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies 1999 Report, Cm 4657 and the Executive Agencies 1999 Report, CM 4658 which have been laid in both Houses. The Executive Non-Departmental Public Bodies Report brings together performance and trend data on 89 bodies, and the Executive Agencies Report brings together performance and trend data on 104 agencies and two departments operating on agency lines.

The NDPBs Report shows that overall 69 per cent. of targets were achieved and that the number of measurable targets has increased substantially to 82 per cent., a 17 per cent. increase on last year. The Executive Agencies Report shows that overall 75 per cent. of targets were achieved and that the number of measurable targets has increased to 80 per cent., a 2 per cent. increase on last year.

Last March, the Government published the "Modernising Government" White Paper which made a commitment to bring the standard of all public services up to the level of the best so that they deliver what users want in an effective and responsible way. The performance of Executive Agencies and Executive NDPBs, as the main delivery arm of Central Government, is central to achieving this goal.

In raising standards throughout the public sector, the Government aim to build on existing achievements and seek further gains by ensuring the right mechanisms are in place to monitor and report the progress of all Agencies and NDPBs.

In order to achieve sustained improvement, it is essential that these bodies should have measurable targets which are strategic, achievable, relevant to the business and timed; adopt robust customer satisfaction targets; have no more than eight key performance targets that focus on the main objectives of the business and set out more stretching targets that build on previous achievements.

We will be working to achieve this sustained improvement over the coming year.

Press Officers

Mr. Lansley: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office how many press officers were employed in her Department at (a) May 1997, (b) January 1998, (c) January 1999 and (d) January 2000; and what was the total expenditure on press officers by her Department in each of the years concerned. [112363]

Marjorie Mowlam: The total expenditure on press officers in the Cabinet Office Press Office in the financial year 1997–98 was £453,646; 1998–99 was £512,255—the total to date for 1999–2000 (until the end of January) is £590,394.

The number of press officers in post in Cabinet Office Press Office at May 1997 was 12, January 1998 was 11, January 1999 was 14, and January 2000 was 20.

In addition, a dedicated press office was set up in March 1999, to co-ordinate Government media activity on the Year 2000 Millennium Bug problem. The Unit was set up by the President of the Council. The total expenditure on press officers in the Unit in 1998–99 was nil. The total expenditure on press officers this financial year, for 1999–2000 is £156,961.

No press officers were employed in the Unit in January 1999. Five press officers were employed in January 2000.

Recycling

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what percentage of documentation used by her Department is (a) made from recycled paper and (b) collected for recycling. [111610]

Mr. Stringer: Documentation used by my Department is procured using criteria which include environmental considerations, value for money and performance in use in office machinery. The option of using recycled paper is under review. No statistics are available for the proportion of paper that is recycled. Arrangements are in place for the collection and recycling of much of the waste paper produced in the Department. No statistics are available of the proportion that is so treated.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Passes (Former Members)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee how many House of Commons current passes were held by former hon. Members on 31 December 1999. [113081]

Mrs. Roe: As at 31 December 1999, out of a total of 134 photopasses which had been issued to former hon. Members, 101 were current.

A further five former hon. Members had applied for photopasses, but had not collected them.

Road Safety Strategy

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee what measures will be taken in pursuance of the Government's road safety strategy to improve the driving of (a) employees of the House who drive vehicles on House of Commons business and (b) hon. Members. [113530]

Mrs. Roe: (a) There are very few instances of House employees having to drive vehicles on House of Commons business; in any event, this would be a matter for the Heads of the individual House departments, not for the Committee; (b) this is a matter for individual hon. Members.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Retirement Pension Forecasts

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people were awarded a penalty payment for the late processing of retirement pension forecasts in each of the last five years for which figures are available; what were the total sums awarded in each year; and if he will make a statement; [112644]

(2) how many people were waiting for a decision on their retirement pension forecast at the last date for which figures are available; how many had been waiting for (a) in excess of three months, (b) six months and (c) a year; and if he will make a statement; [112645]

(3) what plans he has to improve the time taken to issue retirement pension forecasts; and if he will make a statement. [112643]

Mr. Rooker: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Bob Russell, dated 6 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your Parliamentary Questions about Retirement Pension forecasts.

There are no provisions for payment of a penalty payment for the late processing of a retirement pension forecast.

The Benefits Agency receives approximately 600,000 applications for a pension forecast each year. The current target for issuing the reply to applicant's is 95% within 40 working days of their receipt. Actual achievement has been affected by problems we have experienced with NIRS2, however last month we actually achieved 90.3%.

There are no plans to change this target.

The table attached shows the number of outstanding pension forecasts as at 1 March.

I hope this is helpful.

Outstanding pension forecasts as at 1 March 2000

Forecasts	Number of forecasts involved	Reason for delay
Forecasts waiting to be processed	49,965	This amount of available work is the norm for this time of year. 96 per cent. of this work is still within target date

Poverty

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) families and (b) ethnic minority families are living on below half-average income. [113467]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Number of families and ethnic minority families below half average income 1997–98

Millions

	BHC	AHC
Including the self-employed
Families	5.2	7.1
Ethnic minority families	0.5	0.8
Excluding the self-employed
Families	4.3	6.1
Ethnic minority families	0.4	0.7

Notes:

1. The latest information available is for 1997–98 derived from Households Below Average Income (HBAI) data. The 1979–96/7 HBAI publication presents estimates of the income distribution of individuals by ethnic group. A copy of this is in the Library.
2. The definition used of a family is a single adult or a couple, together with any dependent children. A family is defined as ethnic minority if the head of the family is non-White.
3. The HBAI estimates for 1997–98 are taken from the Family Resources Survey and relate to Great Britain. All estimates are subject to sampling error.
4. The figures are presented on household income both Before Housing Costs (BHC) and After Housing Costs (AHC) in line with HBAI conventions. Figures are also provided including and excluding the self-employed reflecting concerns over the accuracy of income information for the self-employed at the bottom of the income distribution.

Benefit Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list for the Benefit Agency's study of family credit accuracy (i) the number, (ii) the percentage and (iii) the monetary value, of cases found to be (a) erroneous, (b) actually fraudulent, (c) having a high suspicion of fraud and (d) having a low suspicion of fraud. [113462]

Mr. Rooker: The Social Security Select Committee published the results of the Benefits Agency study in February 1999, a copy of which is available in the Library. The figures it contains are not a reliable guide because the study was not based on a statistically valid sample. This was due to the small sample size in a pilot study.

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the progress of the Government's zero tolerance approach to benefit fraud by (a) individuals and (b) organised criminal groups. [111570]

Mr. Rooker: We set out our strategy for combating fraud and reducing error in "Safeguarding Social Security", published on 23 March 1999. We are putting this strategy into practice with strong and sensible safeguards to ensure the right money goes to the right people. Among the new initiatives that carry this forward are the following:

New more robust powers for fraud inspectors in The Child Support, Pensions and Social Security Bill published on 1 December. These provisions give greater clarity and allow all benefit fraud investigations to proceed on the basis of common powers.

All payments will move to automated credit transfer (ACT) from 2003 as a modern, more secure and efficient method of paying benefits. This will virtually eliminate "instrument of payment" fraud and enhance security over the life of a claim. This is expected to yield fraud savings in the region of £140 million—£240 million.

National Fraud Intelligence Unit—announced 24 January 2000—to combine the expertise of our organised fraud investigators with that of other agencies nationwide, including the police and LAs.

From the spring, we will launch a hard hitting TV campaign, aimed at getting the public onside in the fight against fraud. This will aim to shift public attitudes and promote intolerance of those who defraud the system.

Strengthened gateway to Income Support—When we came into office, two out of five Income Support claims were paid without enough evidence. We have halved that. We are insisting on claimants producing more evidence before Income Support is paid. This will save over a £1 billion during the course of this Parliament.

Verification Framework

Sets rigorous standards for Local Authorities (LAs) in verifying HB/CTB claims, including targeted visiting. Key measure to promote fraud prevention and consistent standards of administration across LAs. £15 million funding distributed between the first wave of 84 LAs implementing in 1998–99.

Extra funding of £100 million to enable all local authorities to implement the Framework from 1999–2000. The number of LAs starting to implement is constantly increasing and 234 LAs have so far received funding. Strategy in place to encourage remaining LAs to implement the Framework.

Section 19 of Fraud Act took effect in September 1999. This requires all Housing Benefit claimants to provide detailed personal information that is sufficient for a National Insurance number to be traced and confirmed or issued.

Royal Mail "do not redirect"

Powers introduced under Sections 20 and 21 of the Fraud Act 1997 to prevent fraudulent claimants using the Royal Mail's postal redirection arrangements to submit benefit claims from false addresses; also to provide access to Royal Mail redirection database allowing the Department to cross-match against data held by Royal Mail. Available to all LAs from 1 February 1999. Over 250 LAs now signed up.

Remote Access Terminals

Remote Access (computer) Terminals (RAT) provide LAs with direct access to some benefit information held by the Benefits Agency. These terminals have contributed towards reducing the time it takes to process claims for Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit.

To date, 364 LAs have at least one RAT installed. By the end of March 2000 this figure is expected to increase to 393. Additional terminals are being made available to those LAs using them to capacity.

Benefits Payments (Post Office)

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy that, after 2003, pensioners will continue to be able to draw their pension in cash from a post office without having to pay a charge for doing so. [113137]

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the impact of the decision by banks to charge for the use of automated telling machines owned by other banks on the ability of benefit recipients to obtain benefits in cash from post offices. [113516]

Mr. Rooker: Starting in 2003 we will be moving to a more modern, secure and efficient method of paying benefits through automated credit transfer (ACT). Payment by ACT will become the norm for paying benefits.

We have given an assurance that benefit recipients, whether paid by ACT or otherwise, will continue to have a choice of where they access their cash, with those who wish to collect at post offices still being able to do so. The recent statement about bank charges has no effect on this commitment.

However, we recognise that people will expect to be able to collect the exact amount of their benefits and without incurring charges. Arrangements will be put in place to ensure this happens.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what was the average weekly level of Housing Benefit paid to (a) tenants of registered social landlords and (b) tenants of private landlords affected by the four weeks in arrears rule in the last 12 months for which figures are available; [112653]

(2) what proportion of Housing Benefit claimants are (a) tenants of registered social landlords and (b) tenants of private landlords affected by the four weeks in arrears rule. [112621]

Angela Eagle: The answer is in the table.

Housing Benefit recipients, tenants of registered social landlords and private landlords, Great Britain—May 1998

Type	All recipients	Paid four weeks in arrears	Proportion paid four weeks in arrears (Percentage)	Average weekly amount of HB (£)
Tenants of registered social landlords	840,000	242,000	29	54.50
Tenants of private landlords	971,000	352,000	36	61.10

Notes:
1. Figures are the latest available.
2. The number of recipients are rounded to the nearest thousand, proportions to the nearest whole per cent. and average amounts of benefit to the nearest ten pence.
3. Recipients refer to benefit units, which may be a single person or a couple.

Social Security Act 1992

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what reports he has requested under section 139A of the Social Security Act 1992; and if he will make a statement. [112704]

Angela Eagle: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has, to date, asked the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate to inspect and provide 103 reports to him under section 139A of the Social Security Administration Act 1992, on the administration of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit by local authorities.

Stakeholder Pension Scheme

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the implication of delays in resolving the problems associated with the NIRS2 computer system for the date of implementation of the stakeholder pension scheme. [112949]

Mr. Rooker: Detailed proposals are being developed for the implementation of stakeholder pensions and we do not expect the intended implementation date of April 2001 to be affected by the NIRS2 computer system.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress his Department has made towards the procurement of new information and communication technology for the Child Support Agency. [111776]

Angela Eagle: The Department is continuing to work closely with Affinity (the Department's private sector partner) to finalise the Information Technology support to be provided for the Child Support Agency, and to develop and agree the contractual arrangements.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Russia

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he discussed plutonium policy during his recent visit to Moscow; and if he will make a statement. [112358]

Mr. Vaz: FCO Ministers and officials hold regular discussions with the Russians on proliferation issues. The latest round of talks is taking place at official level on 3 March in Moscow.

Her Majesty's Government announced in December that it would be undertaking a Cross-cutting Review on Nuclear Safety in the Former Soviet Union. Plutonium disposition is one of the issues under discussion within the review.

Stability Pact

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to him by the United States Secretary of State, about the progress made in implementing the Stability Pact for South Eastern Europe. [112483]

Mr. Vaz: We have worked closely with the United States Government on the Stability Pact since its launch in June 1999. The Foreign Secretary regularly discusses the full range of issues relating to the Balkans with Mrs. Albright.

Kosovo

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the head of UNMIK, about the rate at which contributions are being made to the resources of UNMIK. [112487]

Mr. Vaz: The UK, along with its EU and G8 partners, has been discussing regularly with UNMIK the need for timely international support. The UK has already given $2 million this year and is in discussion with UNMIK about the allocation of a further $8 million. The EU has earmarked 45 meuros this year in budgetary support to UNMIK of which a first tranche of 10 meuros is scheduled to be made on 1 March.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to him by Kosovo Police Commissioner Sven Fredriksen about resources needed to train local police in Kosovo. [112484]

Mr. Vaz: The UK is in regular contact with the Head of the OSCE Mission in Kosovo, Daan Everts, about all aspects of the OSCE's efforts in Kosovo, including police training. We are not aware of any representations made by Commissioner Fredriksen to the UK for additional resources needed to train local police in Kosovo.

We have recently increased our contribution of international police trainers to the OSCE Police School to 40 officers (25 per cent. of the international training staff currently in post).

So far 349 recruits have graduated from the Police School. A further 250 recruits started their training on 22 February 2000.

We have also offered to pay £50,000 towards the cost of providing an independent water supply to the OSCE Police Training School.

Sanctions Policy

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of to my hon. Friend the Member for Coventry, South (Mr. Cunningham) of 21 February 2000, Official Report, columns 841–42W, on sanctions policy, if he will list the friends of the Iraqi regime to whom he referred. [112917]

Mr. Hain: The reference covers all those who in one way or another lend their weight to the Iraqi government's attempts to have sanctions lifted without fulfilling in their entirety the obligations laid on it by the international community through the relevant Security Council resolutions.

Punjab

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the Government's study of the potential for establishing consulate facilities within the Punjab. [113002]

Mr. Hain: Feasibility studies into the possibility of improving our services to visa applicants in Chandigarh, Ahmedabad, Sylhet and Lahore have been initiated by my hon. Friend the Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz). These studies are being carried out now by our Posts in the region. We expect the exercise to be completed by mid-year and the results assessed before the summer recess.

The exercise does not include a review of the consular services offered to British Citizens by existing offices in the region.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the items or subjects proposed by each member Government and institution of the European Union for discussion at the IGC, relating to (a) unanimity qualified majority voting, (b) the scope of co-decision with the European Parliament, (c) the absorption of the European Convention of Human Rights into the European Union and Community Treaties and (d) other proposals. [113016]

Mr. Vaz: The European Parliament and Commission gave their formal Opinions earlier this year. Member states have not made formal proposals. Negotiations have been proceeding on the basis of Presidency discussion papers, which the Presidency has promised to make available on the internet. The Government's position on the range of IGC issues is set out in the White Paper which was presented to the House on 15 February.

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the date and location of meetings and scheduled meetings of the Intergovernmental Conference for a New European Treaty, the names of Ministers attending each meeting and the topics (a) discussed and (b) to be discussed; and if a report of the IGC's proceedings will be made prior to the next meeting of the European Council on 23 and 24 March. [113017]

Mr. Vaz: There has been one meeting at Ministerial level and two meetings of the Government Representatives' Group. The full provisional timetable for meetings, including topics to be discussed, is available on the internet at www.portugal.ue-2000.pt. A list of member states' personal representatives will be placed in the Library of the House.

The Presidency is expected to issue a preliminary IGC report to the Lisbon European Council on 23–24 March.

EU Documents

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which EU documents are expected to be placed before the European Council at its meeting on 23 and 24 March; what parliamentary (a) debate and (b) scrutiny each such document has been or will be given; and what will be the status of such documents following the meeting. [112998]

Mr. Vaz: The European Council in Lisbon on 23–24 March is an extraordinary European Council meeting. We do not expect any proposals for Community legislation to be presented to Lisbon.

We have received a paper for Lisbon on "Employment, economic reforms and social cohesion—towards a Europe based on innovation and knowledge" from the Presidency, which we have already presented to the European Scrutiny Committee for information. We will also be sending the European Scrutiny Committee the Government's position on the Lisbon European Council and a paper by the Commission in advance of the meeting.

We expect that there will be a parliamentary statement on the outcome of Lisbon after the meeting.

Iraq

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the decisions under the Iraq oil for food scheme to allocate money from the relevant United Nations escrow account for items other than food and medicine for the Iraqi people; what was the amount in each case; and what position the UK representative at the UN took on each matter. [113064]

Mr. Hain: The Office of the Iraq Programme has received over 17,500 applications under the Oil for Food programme. The total value of these contracts, including the cost of shipping comes to about US$ 14.5 billion.

As my hon. Friend will appreciate, the volume of applications received under the Oil for Food programme make it impractical to provide the information requested in full.

The United Kingdom has no objection to the vast majority of Oil for Food applications. Over 96 per cent. of all contracts submitted under the Oil for Food programme have been approved by the Office of the Iraq Programme. Of the 17,500 Oil for Food applications received by the Office of the Iraq programme the United Kingdom has, of today's date, only 166 contracts on hold. The majority of holds are placed on contracts while a request is made for additional information so that we can ensure that the terms of the contract are consistent with the relevant Security Council resolutions on Iraq.

British Citizenship

Valerie Davey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he will introduce a Bill offering British citizenship to the people of the British Overseas Territories. [113270]

Mr. Battle: As soon as practicable, given the need for preparatory work before the introduction of a bill, and the Government's priorities in the Legislative Programme.

Visas

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the charge in (a) the relevant local currency and (b) pounds sterling equivalent for an application for a visitor's visa in (i) India, (ii) Pakistan and (iii) Bangladesh in each of the last five years for which information is available. [113140]

Mr. Vaz: The current charges in pounds sterling for the various categories of non-settlement visas are as follows:

Single entry	33
Multiple entry (6 months)	45
Multiple entry (1 year)	55
Multiple entry (2 years)	65
Multiple entry (5 years)	80
Long term non-settlement	50

Visa fees are set at a standard sterling rate globally and are converted into local currency according to the commercial rate of exchange. Fees expressed in local currency may therefore, vary from week to week.

The charges for non-settlement visas have remained unchanged since August 1995, apart from the fee for the 5-year multiple entry visa. This was reduced from £130 to £80 in June 1997.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the current arrangements for assessing sponsors' particulars in respect of applications for visitors' visas from (a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Bangladesh; when they were last amended; and for what reason. [113139]

Mr. Vaz: The precise documentation required by sponsors of visa applicants varies according to the type of visa applied for and the circumstances of the individual case. Guidance on the type of documentation required is available to applicants and their sponsors in leaflets available from the FCO and from Visa Sections overseas. This information is also available on the FCO website www.fco.gov.uk.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many applications for visitors' visas were received from

(a) India, (b) Pakistan and (c) Bangladesh; and what percentage of these were refused in each of the last five years for which figures are available. [113141]

Mr. Vaz: The statistics for non-settlement applications over the last five years in the countries requested are as follows:

	1999		1998		1997		1996		1995

Further details of statistics on non-settlement visa applications can be found in the Global Entry Clearance Statistics, copies of which are available in the House of Commons Library for the years 1994–98. Statistics for 1999 are currently being compiled and will be placed in the Library in due course.

China

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what assessment he made of the human rights record of the People's Republic of China before his Department became involved in the exchange arrangements between the Scottish Police College and the State Police of the People's Republic of China; [112800]

(2) if he will make a statement about the role of his Department in the exchange arrangements between the Scottish Police College and the State Police of the People's Republic of China. [112799]

Mr. Battle: The promotion of human rights, including the principle of the rule of law, is an integral part of our relationship with China. We have a critical dialogue with the Chinese Government which enables us both to express our concern about their human rights record and work with them to improve Chinese practices in specific areas, particularly through training schemes and other cooperative projects.

The need to ensure that respect for human rights is a central feature of police reform in China lay behind our positive response to the Chinese request for training in the UK for some senior police officers. The Scottish Police College training was funded in part by the FCO's ASSIST programme budget, and stresses the values of democratic policing and the application of human rights practices in police work.

Iran

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations the Government have made to the Government of Iran about the repression, persecution and imprisonment of members of the Baha'i community in Iran. [112964]

Mr. Hain: We remain concerned at reports of the death sentences passed on three members of the Baha'i community, Mr. Najafabadi, Mr. Moghaddam and Mr. Khulusi in Mashad on 3 February. The picture has been somewhat confused by the recent statement by Mr. Sabeqi, spokesman for the Iranian Judiciary, that no such sentences had been passed. The Portuguese Presidency, on behalf of EU partners, presented a demarche to the Iranian authorities expressing our concern and seeking clarification as to the current status of these three gentlemen on 17 February. We took similar bilateral action with the Iranian Ambassador on 21 February.

We regularly raise with the Iranian authorities our serious concern about treatment of the Baha'is. Persecution of individuals on religious grounds is totally unacceptable.

Mr. Ian Stewart: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to the Iranian authorities following the death sentences imposed on three Iranian Baha'is on 3 February; what is the policy of the Government towards Iran's treatment of the Baha'i community; if the Government will support the resolution condemning Iran at the UN Commission on Human Rights; and if he will make a statement. [112771]

Mr. Hain: We remain concerned at reports of the death sentences passed on Mr. Najafabadi, Mr. Moghaddam and Mr. Khulusi in Mashad on 3 February. The picture has been somewhat confused by the recent statement by Mr. Sabeqi, spokesman for the Iranian Judiciary, that no such sentences had been passed. The Portuguese Presidency, on behalf of EU partners, presented a demarche to the Iranian authorities expressing our concern and seeking clarification as to the current status of these three gentlemen on 17 February. We took similar bilateral action with the Iranian Ambassador on 21 February.

We regularly raise with the Iranian authorities our serious concern about treatment of the Baha'is. Persecution of individuals on religious grounds is totally unacceptable. The EU Sponsored United Nations General Assembly resolution on Human Rights in Iran adopted on 18 December 1999 reaffirmed international concern about their situation. We and our EU partners will again be tabling the United Nations Commission on Human Rights resolution on Human Rights in Iran for the Commission in Geneva in April.

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he received reports of the death sentences passed on three Iranian Bahai's; what representations he has made relating to this; and if he will make a statement. [113273]

Mr. Hain: We first learnt of death sentences being passed on three members of the Baha'i community, Mr. Najafabadi, Mr. Moghaddam and Mr. Khulusi in Mashad shortly after the sentences were announced on 3 February. The picture has been somewhat confused by the recent statement by Mr. Sadeqi, spokesman for the Iranian Judiciary, that no such sentences had been passed. The Portuguese Presidency, on behalf of EU partners, presented a demarche to the Iranian authorities expressing our concern and seeking clarification as to the current status of these three gentlemen on 17 February. We took similar bilateral action with the Iranian Ambassador on 21 February.

We regularly raise with the Iranian authorities our serious concern about treatment of the Baha'is. Persecution of individuals on religious grounds is totally unacceptable.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Government of Iran about the treatment and planned execution of members of the Baha'i community. [112801]

Mr. Hain: We remain concerned at reports of the death sentences passed on Mr. Najafabadi, Mr. Moghaddam and Mr. Khulusi in Mashad on 3 February. The picture has been somewhat confused by the recent statement by Mr. Sadeqi, spokesman for the Iranian Judiciary, that no such sentences had been passed. The Portuguese Presidency, on behalf of EU partners, presented a demarche to the Iranian authorities expressing our concern and seeking clarification as to the current status of these three gentlemen on 17 February. This was followed up with a further demarche in Tehran on 19 February. We took similar bilateral action with the Iranian Ambassador on 21 February.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mozambique

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment her Department has made of difficulties relating to customs controls being encountered by those taking goods into Mozambique by (a) air and (b) road. [113455]

Clare Short: There have been some difficulties in clearing relief items through Mozambican customs as officials were initially overwhelmed by the influx of goods. To increase the flow of items through customs, an additional three customs officials were positioned in Maputo airport by the Mozambican authorities. Staff in the British High Commission have also been working tirelessly to assist these efforts.

Since 1996, DFID and its predecessor the ODA has also been providing substantial support to the Mozambican government for their programme to reform and modernise its Customs Department. We have provided some £10 million in support for this project thus far.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when her Department first asked the Ministry of Defence to provide helicopters to help in the Mozambique crisis. [113457]

Clare Short: We first asked the Ministry of Defence what military assets were available in the region on Saturday 26 February. At that point we were informed that no military assets were available within 3,000 miles of Mozambique.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when her Department first sought helicopters to assist in the Mozambique crisis. [113458]

Clare Short: We provided the World Food Programme with US$1 million for helicopter operations on Saturday 26 February. This support allowed the South African Defence Force to continue their essential rescue and relief operations. Commercial helicopters were sought simultaneously.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if her Department has hired helicopters from Captain McKenzie of Nairobi to help in the Mozambique crisis. [113459]

Clare Short: We have received many offers for the hire of helicopters both from the region and also further afield. My officials were grateful for Captain McKenzie's offer of assistance, but following advice from our air operations experts DFID contracted helicopters through alternative regional sources.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when her Department was first informed of an impending flood crisis in Mozambique; and what action she took at that stage. [113456]

Clare Short: My Department has permanent staff based in Maputo who have been monitoring the floods since mid January. In collaboration with our field based staff, specialists from my Conflict and Humanitarian Affairs Department began detailed surveillance of the floods on 24 January. We deployed two humanitarian specialists to the region on 11 February. They conducted rapid assessments and liaised with the Mozambican authorities and humanitarian organisations over priority needs. We despatched a consignment of over 400 tents on 12 February from the UK to Maputo for the Red Cross to distribute for emergency shelter to those made homeless. We also supported the early deployment of the United Nations Disaster Assessment and Co-ordination Team. Between 11 and 16 February, my Department channelled some £1.1 million for immediate relief through the United Nations Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs, UNICEF, International Federation of the Red Cross, World Vision, Oxfam and ActionAid.

Following a sudden deterioration in the situation overnight on 25 February, staff from the field contacted DFID London on Saturday 26 February. We immediately contacted the United Nations at a high level to facilitate a quick response by the UN humanitarian organisations. On the same afternoon, recognising the seriousness of the situation, DFID provided the World Food Programme with US$1 million for helicopter operations. This support allowed the South African Defence Force to continue their essential rescue and relief operations.

We have also mobilised an additional nine helicopters, including four from the RAF, to assist with the rescue and relief effort. To assist with the effective tasking of all helicopters, we have seconded a logistics expert into the World Food Programme. But helicopters are not the total answer. We also deployed 70 boats and specialist trained crews, together with a number of large capacity self-inflating life rafts.

We have also arranged through the Ministry of Defence for the Royal Fleet Auxiliary Fort George to be deployed off Mozambique. The ship will arrive at the end of this week and will provide a further five helicopters to assist in the air relief operations. DFID has already contributed over £7.2 million for rescue and immediate relief including the provision of shelter, water, sanitation and health support. This funding has been channelled through the United Nations Office for the Co-ordination of Humanitarian Affairs, UNICEF, World Food Programme, Red Cross, ActionAid, Oxfam, Save the Children Fund and World Vision. These activities are being co-ordinated with the Mozambican authorities. We stand ready to provide further assistance.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will make it her policy to procure the services of all available lifting helicopters in the armed services for deployment in relief operations in Mozambique; and if she will make a statement. [112745]

Clare Short: We will continue to base our decisions during humanitarian emergencies on the needs on the ground; resources available locally and regionally, details of assets available from the Ministry of Defence, their speed of response and operational viability and how they compare to available alternatives. We will always seek to use the UK development assistance budget as effectively as possible in order to maximise the benefit of the budget for people affected by humanitarian emergencies.

In addition to providing US$1 million to the World Food Programme for the continued operation of the South African Defence Force helicopters on 26 February. A further five helicopters and support crew were sourced from the region on February 29.

On 1 March we provided resources for the Ministry of Defence to deploy four Royal Air Force Puma helicopters to Mozambique to assist with the rescue and relief efforts. On 2 March we also provided resources to the MOD to deploy the Royal Fleet Auxiliary ship Fort George to the coast of Mozambique so that its five Sea King helicopters can assist with the relief operation.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent assessment her Department has made of the problems of soil erosion and deforestation in the hinterland of the Mozambique river system; and if she will make a statement. [112699]

Mr. Foulkes: DFID has programmes that address soil conservation in both countries that form the hinterland of Mozambique's main river systems. In South Africa we support water resource management and forest conservation programmes within the Department of Water Affairs and Forestry. In Zimbabwe, DFID is helping communities in the head waters of the Save and Runde rivers to reduce erosion and siltation while working to form user-led catchment councils to manage better the water resources in their areas.

United States

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what meetings (a) she and (b) other Ministers in her Department held with members and officials of the United States Government during the visit to the United States between 25 and 29 September 1999; what was the date and location of each meeting; and who was present from the United States Government at each meeting. [113091]

Mr. Foulkes: The Secretary of State for International Development met with Brady Anderson, Administrator, USAID, on 26 September at the offices of the World bank in Washington while attending the 1999 Annual Meetings of the Board of Governors of the IMF/World bank.

Albania

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what is the nature of the assistance provided by the European Union in exchange for the collection of weapons in Albania, with reference to the Council Decision of 17 December 1999 (1999/846/CFSP). [112347]

Mr. Foulkes: The United Nations Development Programme (UNDP) is the lead organisation in the Weapons in Exchange for Development pilot programme in Gramsh, Albania, which has recently been extended to the Elbasan and Peshkpja regions. The Council Decision of 17 December 1999 enabled the European Commission's earlier pledge of 500,000 euros to be applied across the extended pilot programme.

The UK has contributed bilaterally to this programme since early 1999 by providing two ammunition technical officers to UNDP to oversee the collection process. We are also funding a feasibility study on the long-term safe disposal of ammunition and ordnance in Albania, the recommendations of which will be passed to NATO, OSCE and other donors.

China

Dr. Tonge: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what recent representations she has received concerning conditions in state orphanages in China; and if she will make a statement. [112831]

Mr. Foulkes: We have received no recent representations concerning conditions in state orphanages in China. Our Department support efforts to reform and improve the conditions for children in care. We are currently supporting a British NGO to work with the Chinese authorities to improve the conditions of children who are institutionalised, many of whom are orphans.

Romania

Mr. Gale: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will publish the results of the review, conducted by her Department in 1998–99, of the activities of the European Children's Trust in

Romania supported by the Know-how Fund; what action was taken by her Department as a result of that review; and if she will make a statement. [113127]

Mr. Foulkes: I assume the review to which the hon. Member refers concerns a report that DFID commissioned by the National Institute of Social Work in 1998. This report evaluated a programme of child welfare activities in Romania that we supported between 1995 and 1998, undertaken by the European Children's Trust. I will place a copy of the report, which was passed to the Romanian authorities, in the Library of the House. No specific action was necessary as a result of the report, but relevant lessons identified by the report's authors have been taken into account in discussions on further assistance in this field, currently under way with the Romanian Government.

HEALTH

Retinitis Pigmentosa and Usher Syndrome

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate his Department has made of the number of people in the UK suffering from (a) retinitis pigmentosa and (b) Usher syndrome. [111994]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not collected centrally. However, the British Retinitis Pigmentosa Society estimates that there are 25,000 people with the condition in the United Kingdom; figures for the incidence of Usher syndrome in Britain are incomplete.

Indemnity Cover (GPs)

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how he will assess whether a provider of approved indemnity cover for GPs has sufficient reserves to meet its liabilities; [112413]

(2) what criteria will be used to approve providers of indemnity cover for GPs under the Health Act 1999; and what steps he is taking to ensure that the approval procedure does not discriminate between classes of indemnifier; [112412]

(3) if the procedure for approving provision of indemnity cover for GPs will ensure that indemnifiers comply with requirements on insolvency margins equivalent to those made under the Insurance Companies Act 1982; and if he will make a statement. [112414]

Mr. Denham: Section 9 of the Health Act 1999 gives the Secretary of State power to require Part II practitioners to hold approved indemnity cover with an approved body. The Secretary of State has power in Regulations to prescribe the circumstances in which such cover shall be required, and the terms for the cover.

This enables the Secretary of State to ensure that cover will be approved only if it is adequate to meet the anticipated level of claims. This will apply both to cover provided by the medical protection organisations and commercial insurers. It is intended that the regulations will ensure through the approval mechanism that cover will still meet claims that arise from events when the clinician was covered but only come to light later, even if this is after the period of cover has ceased. Other criteria are currently the subject of consultation with interested organisations.

The purpose of section 9 is to provide greater protection to patients awarded damages following negligence claims. The approval process will be open and transparent, the intention will be to ensure the highest level of protection reasonably achievable in the current climate.

NHS Funding

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which regional development agencies have to date submitted representations to his Department regarding the level of NHS funding. [112359]

Mr. Denham: I am not aware of any representations from regional development agencies to the Department regarding the level of National Health Service funding.

Health Authority Budgets

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the budget per head of population for each health authority area in England for 1999–2000. [112747]

Mr. Denham: The table shows the health authority allocations per weighted head of population for 1999–2000.

London Hospital Trusts

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the actions being taken by the Government with the London health authorities to reduce the deficits of the London hospital health trusts. [112684]

Mr. Denham: The London Regional Office of the National Health Service Executive is working closely with health authorities and HNS trusts managing difficult financial positions. Health authorities and NHS trusts are expected to agree plans to achieve financial balance over the shortest possible period.

NHS Staff (Worcestershire)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list for each year from 1992 to date the number of (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) consultants, employed by NHS trusts in Worcestershire; and if he will make a statement. [112809]

Mr. Denham: The table illustrates that the number of nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff, together with hospital medical staff employed in Worcestershire, has increased during the period 1992 to 1998. While the figures are not directly comparable due to hospital reconfigurations throughout the period, the figures for 1997 and 1998 clearly demonstrate the Government's commitment to continue to increase the number of doctors and nurses working in the National Health Service.

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services: Nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff and hospital medical staff, employed within North Worcestershire HA and Worcester and District HA [1,2] as at 30 September each year

1998	2,890	3,960	540	180

[1] Staff from the health authorities and other trusts within both HAs are included in these figures.

[2] In 1993, 1994 and 1995 there was also North Worcestershire HA in the Worcestershire Region.

[3] 1992 figures exclude agency staff and include learners.

[4] 1993 to 1998 figures exclude agency staff and learners.

[5] Before 1996, some hospital medical staff were employed directly by West Midlands Regional Authority, and so are not included in these figures.

[6] Five or less and greater than zero.

Notes:

A new classification of the non-medical workforce was introduced in 1995.

Information based on this classification is not directly comparable with earlier years.

Figures are rounded to the nearest 10:—zero.

Health Visitors (London)

Mr. Gardiner: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the reasons for the disparity in the allocation of whole-time equivalent health visitors employed by Parkside Community Health Trust between the health authority in Brent and Harrow and the Chelsea and Westminster Health Authority. [112811]

Mr. Denham: Decisions about the level of investment in health visiting services are made by health authorities, in discussion with Primary Care Groups and/or Primary Care Trusts and National Health Service trusts, and take account of the identified health needs of the local population. It would, therefore, be misleading to compare the service provided by Parkside Community Health Trust to these two health authorities on the basis of whole time equivalents only. The three Primary Care Groups in Brent are currently developing integrated nursing strategies which will take a broader view of population need and review the current deployment of all nursing and therapy provision, including health visiting.

Lynton Cottage Hospital

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the suitability of Lynton Cottage Hospital, North Devon, for the provision of the new intermediate care he has announced. [112945]

Mr. Denham: It is the responsibility of local health authorities, National Health Service trusts, and Primary Care Groups to devise local plans to meet the intermediate care needs of the people of North Devon is a matter for the North and East Devon Health Authority, North Devon PCG and Northern Devon Healthcare NHS Trust to assess.

NHS Direct

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many callers to NHS Direct in November 1999, December 1999, January 2000 and February 2000 were advised (a) to visit an accident and emergency unit, (b) to contact a general practitioner and (c) to call on the emergency services. [112734]

Ms Stuart [holding answer 2 March 2000]: Between November and January, on average 36 per cent. of callers were directed to self-care. During this period, NHS Direct helped to take pressure from other busy NHS services, and directed people to the most appropriate level of care.

The table shows the number of callers from NHS Direct who were advised (i) to visit and accident and emergency unit, (ii) to contact a general practitioner, (iii) to call on the emergency services during November, December and January. The information for February is not available.

December[1]	213,000	4,600	13,400	72,800

Health Authorities

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list in rank order the allocations per head of population to each health authority in England in each year for (a) 1996–97, (b) 1997–98, (c) 1998–99 and (d) 1999–2000. [113313]

Mr. Denham: [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Allocations for 1999–2000 are not comparable with those for 1996–97 to 1998–99 which cover hospital and community health services (HCHS) only. 1999–2000 was the first year of unified allocations which cover HCHS, prescribing and discretionary general medical services.

1999–2000 allocations include increases for targeted funding for health authorities with health action zones.

Committee on Safety of Medicines

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines who have, in each year from 1987 to date, declared outside interests in (a) SmithKline Beecham, (b) SmithKline and French laboratories, (c) Merck Sharpe and Dohme, (d) Pasteur Merieux and (e) the Wellcome Foundation. [112835]

Ms Stuart: This information is published annually in the "Medicines Act 1968 Advisory Bodies—Annual Reports" copies of which, dating back to 1987, are available in the Library, The reports include lists of interests in the pharmaceutical industry declared by each committee member. The 1999 report, which is due to be published in July this year, will include the entries in the table relating to members of the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) (this information is correct as at 6 March 2000). In addition, Professor J. H. Scarffe is Head of Programmes (Career Development) at the Wellcome Trust.

Hospital Complaints (London)

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many formal complaints were made by (a) patients and (b) their families against each of the London hospitals for the years (i) 1996, (ii) 1997, (iii) 1998 and (iv) 1999. [112683]

Ms Stuart: Figures on National Health Service complaints are not collected in the format requested. Data are collected for written complaints and by financial year. These figures are published annually in a statistical report, "Handling complaints: monitoring the NHS complaints procedures—England" and copies of the reports for 1996–97 and 1997–98 have been placed in the statistical section of the Library.

Data for these years was collected for NHS trusts and health authorities on the basis of the old NHS Executive Regional Office boundaries for North and South Thames. Figures for 1998–99 will be published later this month and will be based on the NHS Executive London Regional Office boundaries.

Hospitals

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which community hospitals have closed since May 1996; how many hospital beds have been lost as a result; and if he will make a statement. [111424]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally.

Retirement

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) health visitors (b) district nurses, and (c) school nurses will become eligible to retire at age 55 years within the next five years; and what proportion of the current workforce in each case this represents. [112453]

Mr. Denham: The available information is in the table. Numbers of school nurses are not collected centrally.

DEFENCE

Weapons Contracts

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many AN/PRC-138 have to be supplied to his Department within the £5 million contract awarded by his Department to the Harris Corporation. [111011]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from John F. Howe to Mr. Mike Hancock, dated 7 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about how many data radios (AN/PRC-138) are due to be supplied to the Department within the £5 million contract awarded to the Harris Corporation. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency (DPA).

The DPA placed a prime contract for the provision of sixty-nine of these radios (including ancillaries, spares, training and three years' support) with SERCO Technology Ltd., Waterlooville, Hampshire on 14 June 1999. The contract provides a secure data messaging capability in support of operations in the Balkans. The first deliveries were made during August 1999 and were completed by the end of November 1999.

To satisfy the requirements of this contract SERCO Technology Ltd. placed a sub-contract with the Harris Corporation.

Porton Down

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many animal experiments were carried out at Porton Down in the last year for which figures are available. [111940]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 1 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Executive Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir John Chisholm to Mr. Norman Baker, dated 7 March 2000:

I have been asked to reply to your question about the number of animal experiments carried out at Porton Down in the last year for which figures are available.

In 1999, the number of procedures undertaken using animals at DERA's Chemical and Biological Defence Sector at Porton Down was 11501 (1 animal = 1 procedure; but note that individual animals may take part in several procedures). This figure reflects the information provided to the Home Office.

I hope this is helpful.

Duke of York's Royal Military School

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Duke of York's Royal Military School for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111771]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Duke of York's Royal Military School Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from J. A. Cummings to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 7 March 2000:

I am replying to your Question to Secretary of State for Defence about (a) those targets of the Duke of York's Royal Military School for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of this Agency. A copy of the 98–99 Corporate and Management Plan which contains these targets is held in the House Library.

(a) (i) The Key Targets that were achieved in 1998/99 are as follows:

Key Target 2

To achieve 5 or more GCSE passes at grades A* to C to 78% of candidates. Achievement was 90.1% exceeding target by 12.1%.

Key Target 3

To achieve 88% of A levels passes at grades A to E. Achievement was 95.2% exceeding target by 7.2%.

Key Target 4

To achieve 3 or more A level passes at grade A to E for 80% of candidates. Achievement was 81.8% exceeding target by 1.8%.

Key Target 6

To achieve 100% GNVQ Advanced BTEC National Diploma passes. Achievement was 100%.

Key Target 7

To achieve places in higher education for 70% of sixth form leavers. Achievement was 85% exceeding target by 15%.

Key Target 8

To achieve a pupil per capita cost of no more than £13,151. Achievement was £11,020, £2.131 less than target.

Key Target 9

To generate income of at least £452,000. Achievement £492,000, £40,000 in excess of the target.

Key Target 10

To achieve at least 260 applications for September 1999 intake. Achievement was 294.

(ii) Key Targets that were not achieved in 1998/99 are as follows:

Key Target 1

To Achieve 100% of GCSE passes at A* to G target was 100%. Achievement was 99.86%. This reflected one candidate who did not complete all of the assessment requirements for one subject being upgraded in that subject. 737 other subject entries were graded in the range A* to G with a total of 89.30% being graded in the range A-C.

Key Target 5

To achieve 34% of A Level passes at grades A to B. Achievement was 31.9%. The percentage of A and B grades achieved reflected credit on that cohort of students. Unfortunately, the cohort as a whole was less able than in 97–98, nevertheless this was an improvement on 96–97.

(b) The Agency's Key Targets (KTs) are reviewed annually by the Board of HM Commissioners for the school and the Adjutant General's staff, to ensure targets are taut, realistic and demanding. The annual targets set for the School's academic performance (KT1–6) show an increase each year. As part of the exercise to seek better performance targets are cascaded to Heads of Department allowing them to take more ownership. However, academic performance is dependant on pupil ability. Recognising this we will be considering alternative ways of measuring performance on the basis of the 'value added' by the school to the pupil. In line with the continuing drive for efficiency, the School's per capita rate and the income generation target is kept constantly under review.

Defence Sales Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Sales Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111770]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Disposal Sales Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Mr. A. J. S. Taylor to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 7 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Disposal Sales Agency's (DSA) targets for 1998/99 and 1999/2000 as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the DSA.

The key targets for the financial year 1998/99 and the percentage achieved are listed as follows:

Key Target 1

To achieve disposal sales income of £30M from Government to Government sales of surplus capital equipment and stores—73% achieved.

Key Target 2

To achieve disposal sales income of £30M from commercial sales of MOD's surplus items—93% achieved.

Key Target 3

To extend the Agency's disposal services to other public sector organisations and to secure an additional £1M of sales income as a result—Achieved.

Key Target 4

To develop, contract for, and introduced new IT systems by 31 March 1999, taking account of the Year 2000 requirements for equipment and software—Achieved.

Key Target 5

To put in place the mechanisms fully to test the level of customer satisfaction for the Agency's services, and those services provided by its appointed contractors—Achieved.

Key Target 6

To reduce the unit cost of generating £1M of sales to £65,000 from a baseline figure of £90,500 achieved in 1994/95—Achieved.

In an increasingly competitive marketplace, which was subjected to shrinking national defence budgets, only a relatively few nations have a real interest in large second-hand capital equipment and therefore demand was not widespread.

In 1998/99 the DSA operated in a depressed market particularly for major platform sales—this was not only in economic terms as sales opportunities had also been lost because of political events, changing operational requirements and security considerations outside the Agency's control or sphere of influence. Sales targets have traditionally been the major Key Targets of the Agency over the last 5 years. In that time the Agency has surpassed its targets by a 10% margin (£370M as compared to cumulative 5-year target of £335M). In year variances, however, do occur. Estimating sales receipts, based inevitably on limited and shifting information from the three Services, together with the sometimes incomplete conditional state of the surplus equipment when it is declared for sale and set against unknown market conditions is far from an exact science.

The Key Targets for 1999/2000 are listed below:

Key Target 1

To achieve disposal sales income of £66M from sales of surplus Government owned equipment and stores.

Key Target 2

To reduce the unit cost of generating £1M of sales to £62,500 from a baseline of £90,500 achieved in 1994–95.

Key Target 3

To undertake customer satisfaction surveys designed to identify key issues and priorities, measure perceptions and expectations, and to communicate results and benefits of actions taken to the Agency's customer base.

Further information on the DSA can be found in the DSA Annual Report and Accounts 1998/99, a copy of which was laid before the Houses on 22nd July 1999. Targets for performance for 1999/2000 were printed on 26th October 1999 (Official Report, columns 767/768).

Specialist Procurement Services

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Specialist Procurement Services for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111736]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from J. W. Howe to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 7 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the targets of the Specialist Procurement Services (SPS) for 1998–99. You asked (a) which targets (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

(a) (i) The SPS targets for 1998–99, that were met or exceeded are as follows:

Description	1998–99 target	1998–99 performance
Percentage improvement in SPS services identified by customers (baseline 1997)	20	20
Percentage of SPS reports delivered within agreed date	90	92.1
Percentage of Asset Accounting Centre (AAC) core accounts audited	96	97.6
Percentage of AAC major accounts audited	66	73.8
Percentage of Category A and B equipment projects for which cost forecasting advice will be available	93	96

VAILABLE

(a) (ii) There were no SPS Targets that were not met in the year 1998–99.

As to part (b) of the question, SPS ceased to be an agency in its own right on the 31 March 1999 and was absorbed into the new Defence Procurement Agency (DPA) that was formed on 1 April 1999. It has nevertheless been working to targets which require continuous improvement and which it is on course to meet.

Naval Bases and Supply Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Naval Bases and Supply Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111751]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Naval Bases and Supply Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from M. A. Westgate to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 7 March 2000:

Thank you for your Parliamentary Question Reference 1157K addressed to the Secretary of State for Defence, seeking information on the Naval Bases and Supply Agency's (NBSA) Key Targets (KTs). As this falls within my responsibility as Deputy Chief Executive of the NBSA I have been asked to reply.

The NBSA had eight KTs for 1998/99, five of which were achieved or were on track, and three which were not. Details are below, including the factors affecting performance, and the actions taken to achieve improvement in the future:

Achieved Targets

KT1:

Complete 95% of the Fleet Time Maintenance Loading Programme (FTMLP) to time, budget and standard—achieved 98%

KT2:

Complete 95% of the Maintenance Requirement agreed at Assisted Maintenance Period (AMP) start date to time, budget and standard—achieved 96%

KT3:

Utilise the Fleet Time Maintenance Loading Programme to establish the baseline for the NBSA Shipwork element of the overall cost per Materially Available Vessel Day (a Ships Support Agency target), and then set targets for reduction—achieved/on track

KT4:

Supply 95% of available material to rectify high priority (A1-B1) Operational Defects within Required Delivery Dates—achieved 97.5%

KT5:

Establish the Agency Account via the CAPITAL Project, including the provision of an Executive Information System to meet business requirements, by March 2000—on track

Targets not achieved

KT6:

To move towards Year 2000 IS compliance by completing 100% of Y2K compliance plans by 30 June 1998—not achieved

The ambitious start date of 30 June 1998 was not met. By end September 1999, NBSA had achieved 100% of systems prepared and ready. The Agency survived Y2K without problems.

KT7:

Achieve year on year Efficiency improvement of 2.2%—not achieved

This target equated to an expected cash saving of £11M at 1998/99 prices. The actual saving achieved was £10M (2%). The main factors for the shortfall were delays in staff savings due to building and IT projects not completing on time, and delays in signing NBSA supplier sub-contracts with industry, which will provide income in future.

KT8:

Achieve full accreditation of Investor in People by December 1999—not achieved

At the end of 1998/99 the Agency was on target to achieve IiP by December 1999. This KT was carried forward to 1999/00. At December 1999 76% of NBSA personnel were working in IiP accredited units, but five units had still not achieved IiP accreditation. The new Departmental target for deferred units is 31 March 2000.

The NBSA produced an Annual Report and Statement of Accounts for 1998/99 and copies were lodged with the House of Commons Library.

I trust this fully explains the situation to you.

Kosovo

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Temporary Field Accommodation has been fully deployed in Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [113190]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: Temporary Field Accommodation has not yet been fully deployed in Kosovo. The main causes of the delay were set out in my hon. Friend the Minister of State for the Armed Forces' answer of 18 January 2000, Official Report, column 397W. Camps are, however, now starting to be occupied. In the meantime, improved tented camps have been made available which provide a good interim enhancement to accommodation standards.

Alma Dettigen Barracks Site

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what contract or memorandum of agreement his Department has signed with Barratts or another developer in relation to Alma Dettigen Barracks site, Deepcut, Surrey; when this was signed; for what reason no information about this was given to locally elected representatives or the hon. Member; if he will place a copy in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [113515]

Dr. Moonie: The contracts for the sale of the former Alma Dettigen Barracks, Deepcut near Camberley, Surrey to Barratt Homes were exchanged on 3 March 2000. Completion is expected on 17 March 2000. The purchaser requested, on commercial grounds, that details of the negotiations and the contractual agreements remain confidential. Accordingly, I am withholding this information under Exemption 7 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many personnel were involved in staff safety monitoring at (a) Rosyth and (b) Faslane in each of the last five years. [112845]

Dr. Moonie: At HM Naval Base Clyde (Faslane), the Health Physics Group is complemented with 16 staff who have direct responsibility for undertaking safety monitoring. Health Physics Group resources are supplemented by trained monitoring staff on-board submarines. Numbers have remained fairly constant over the last five years.

All nuclear safety matters relating to Rosyth Royal Dockyard are a matter for Babcock Rosyth Defence Ltd., the owners of the Dockyard. It is a condition of their contract with the MOD that they must comply with all nuclear safety regulations.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what radioactive monitoring processes exist at (a) Rosyth and (b) Faslane for staff at work and for checking staff on completion of their duties; what equipment is used to carry out these checks; if he will list the safety equipment which is more than (i) one year old, (ii) three years old, (iii) five years old and (iv) 10 years old; which organisation is responsible for safety checks for staff and for monitoring equipment used; and what role he has in reviewing and overseeing staff safety at the sites. [112848]

Dr. Moonie: All nuclear safety matters relating to Rosyth Royal Dockyard are a matter for Babcock Rosyth Defence Limited, the owners of the Dockyard. It is a condition of their contract with the MOD that they must comply with all nuclear safety regulations.

All personnel working in designated areas onboard submarines, in the Active Processing Facility and the Nuclear Repair Workshop at HM Naval Base Clyde (Faslane) are monitored for radioactive contamination on completion of their work with Electra ratemeters and BP7 probes. Additionally, those working in the Active Processing Facility and the Nuclear Repair Workshop are monitored using the IPM-7 type radiation detector.

The Electra ratemeters and BP7 probes are more than one-year-old. The IPM-7 type radiation detectors are more than five-years-old. No radiation monitoring equipment is more than 10-years-old.

The monitoring of personnel and the calibration of instruments are carried out by Health Physics staff from Faslane's Department of Engineering. The Director of Safety and Quality audits these safety procedures. The Chairman of the Naval Nuclear Propulsion Programme also audits nuclear safety under his programme of site authorisation, which mirrors nuclear licensing carried out by the Health and Safety Executive's Nuclear Installations Inspectorate (NII). The NII also reviews nuclear-related health and safety under the Ionising Radiations Regulations 1999.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the safety of Mk 10 radiation monitors with BP 3 Geiger Muller glass probes; if he will list the areas where their use is authorised; and if he will state his policy on the replacement of Mk 10 with BP 3 probes, by a more modern replacement system. [112846]

Dr. Moonie: The Mk 10 Radiation Monitor and BP10 probe are approved instruments for use by the Royal Navy. The BP10 probe is a military version of the commercially available BP3 probe. I am not aware of any written safety assessment for the Mk 10 Radiation Monitor used with the BP10 probe but their use is subject to full calibration procedures in accordance with statutory requirements.

While the Mk 10 Radiation Monitor and BP10 probe are still approved instruments for use on-board HM submarines, they are not routinely used for contamination monitoring of personnel in HM Naval Bases. The preferred instrument for personal contamination monitoring in Naval Bases Clyde and Devonport is the Electra ratemeter and BP7 probe.

A specialist section within MOD is actively seeking a suitable replacement for the Mk 10 Radiation Monitor and BP10 probe for use on-board HM submarines.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many IPM-7 radiation detectors are in use in (a) Rosyth and (b) Faslane; what is his policy on the use of IPM-7 radiation detectors for safety checks on staff at Rosyth and Faslane; and if he will make a statement on differences in the safety procedures for monitoring staff between Rosyth and Faslane. [112847]

Dr. Moonie: At Faslane the 2 IPM-7 type radiation detectors are used for secondary monitoring for personnel working in the Active Processing Facility and the Nuclear Repair Workshop. For work in reactor compartments on submarines the routine is for personnel to be monitored with the Electra ratemeter and BP7 probe. Should any contamination be found by the Electra ratemeter, personnel are then re-checked with the IPM-7 radiation detectors.

All nuclear safety matters relating to Rosyth Royal Dockyard are a matter for Babcock Rosyth Defence Limited, the owners of the Dockyard. It is a condition of their contract with the MOD that they must comply with all nuclear safety regulations.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce secondary monitoring of staff at Faslane; what secondary monitoring procedures are in place at (a) Rosyth and (b) Devonport; and if he will make a statement. [112843]

Mr. Spellar: At HM Naval Base Clyde (Faslane) staff working in the Active Processing Facility and the Nuclear Repair Workshop are already protected through routine secondary monitoring.

All nuclear safety matters relating to the Royal Dockyards at Rosyth and Devonport are a responsibility of the owners of the Dockyards: Babcock Rosyth Defence Limited and Devonport Management Limited respectively. It is a condition of their contracts with the MOD that they must comply with all nuclear safety regulations.

Container Ships

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on his Department's plans to procure four new roll-on roll-off container ships. [110652]

Dr. Moonie: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 29 February 2000, Official Report, columns 207–08W, to my hon. Friend the Member for Dunfermline, West, (Ms Squire).

Atomic Weapons Establishment

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will reassess the decision to award the management contract for the Atomic Weapons Establishment to the British Nuclear Fuels-led consortium from 1 April. [112356]

Mr. Spellar: I refer my hon. Friend to the answers given by the Secretary of State for Defence on 21 February 2000, Official Report, columns 1223–24, to my hon. Friend the Member for Reading, West (Mr. Salter) and the hon. Member for Newbury (Mr. Rendle).

Military Establishments

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military establishments within (a) Somerset and (b) Yeovil constituency, showing in each case the personnel complement; if he will set out the plans to change the (i) number and (ii) manning of such establishments; and if he will make a statement. [110793]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence (MOD) establishments within (a) the county of Somerset and (b) Yeovil constituency are as listed. The personnel complement at each establishment is also given.

Establishment	Town	Personnel complement
(a) County of Somerset
Army Careers Information Office	Taunton	4

(b) Yeovil constituency:
Defence Procurement Agency, Westland Helicoptor Ltd. Team	Yeovil	8
Defence Procurement Agency, Special Procurement Services Office	Yeovil	23
Territorial Army	Yeovil	1

(i) The Civilian Personnel Management Taunton is due to close on 31 March 2000 and the Territorial Army centre Bridgwater is due to close on 30 June 2000.

(ii) Current plans to change the manning of establishments in Yeovil constituency and the County of Somerset are set out as follows:

With effect from 2003, 513 military posts, 16 civilian posts and 60 contractors will transfer from RNAS Yeovilton to RAF Wittering and Cottesmore, as a result of the creation of Joint Force 2000;

With effect from 30 June 2000, 30 civilian staff will transfer from DERA Bridgwater to DERA Porton Down as part of DERA's programme to integrate capabilities.

With effect from April 2000 there will be a requirement for 16 military personnel at RNAS Yeovilton, due to a switch from Army to Navy maintenance regulations.

RMPA Programme

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will make a statement on the recovery of liquidated damages for late delivery in the renegotiation of replacement maritime patrol aircraft contracts; [112472]

(2) what penalty clauses were included in contracts placed as part of the Replacement Maritime Patrol Aircraft programme since 1995; and if he will make a statement; [112471]

(3) what were the conclusions of the Critical Design Review of the Replacement Maritime Patrol Aircraft programme; what action has been taken as a result of each recommendation; and if he will make a statement; [112470]

(4) if he will list the terms and conditions of the renegotiated contract with British Aerospace for the RMPA programme, indicating which ones, and for what reason, differ from those in the 1996 contract; and if he will make a statement; [112469]

(5) what technical and programme factors led to the in-service date slippage of the RMPA project to 2005; and if he will make a statement; [112468]

(6) if he will provide a summary of the costs of the Replacement Maritime Patrol Aircraft Programme including development and production costs, in particular (a) costs arising as a result of delays to the planned in-service date of the RMPA and (b) the reasons for cost variation since the original RMPA contract was placed; and if he will make a statement. [112467]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 2 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from J. W. Howe to Mr. Paul Keetch, dated 7 March 2000:

I am replying to your six questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Nimrod MRA4 programme (previously known as the Replacement Maritime Patrol Aircraft). This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

You asked about the cost of the Nimrod MRA4 programme. Overall project costs are estimated at £2317M (at 1999/00 prices), a reduction of £92M (on the same price base) on the estimated costs at MoD Approval in August 1996, prior to contract placement in December that year. The reduction is due primarily to the renegotiation of the contract in early 1999, which included changes in risk assessment and recovery of Liquidated Damages (LD). The additional run-on costs on the existing Nimrod MR2 (up to its currently planned out of service date) consequent on the slippage in delivery of Nimrod MRA4 are offset by the reduction in the cost of operating Nimrod MRA4 over the same period.

You asked also about the nature of technical and programme factors which led to the slippage of the ISD to 2005. As the Minister made clear when he announced the slippage BAe Operations Ltd. (now known as BAE SYSTEMS) experienced technical difficulties with the development of new information technology toolsets, particularly in the area of design and concurrent engineering, and difficulty in resourcing this complex aircraft project. Additionally, the acquisition of the necessary software tools took longer than anticipated and the company faced particular difficulties in applying new information to the design of the aircraft.

In three of your questions you asked about contract terms and conditions and the differences in the renegotiated contract, in particular penalty clauses and the recovery of Liquidated Damages. It is not practical or meaningful to list all the terms and conditions of the renegotiated contract here. But the main features related to programme timescales which resulted in the slippage of the in-service date (ISD) from April 2003 to March 2005, changes to the contract specification to clear up ambiguities, operationally acceptable reductions in specification and benefits in through life support. The MoD also secured a revised Variation of Price (VOP) formula whereby our commitment to pay inflation over nine years of the contract period is greatly reduced. In addition, we secured BAE SYSTEMS' commitment to integrate the Active Search Sonobuoy System during the main aircraft programme and so deliver an active search capability at ISD. Liquidated Damages will also be recovered from BAE SYSTEMS for delayed contract deliverables and a new Liquidated Damages provision was negotiated to protect against further delays.

Your final question related to the recent Critical Design Review (CDR). The Air Vehicle Critical Design Review for the Nimrod MRA4 was held at the end of September 1999. There were 34 time-bound actions placed at the review which have all now been completed, signifying that a major engineering design milestone for the Nimrod MRA4 Air Vehicle is complete: thus far the aircraft has met the revised programme milestones.

Defence Exports Services Organisation

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the budget of the Defence Exports Services Organisation for (a) the past two years, (b) the current year and (c) the next two years. [112548]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 2 March 2000]: Actual cash expenditure on the DESO budget for the last two years has been:

£ million

	Expenditure	Receipts	Net operating costs
1997–98	55.810	41.430	14.380
1998–99	45.290	29.280	16.010

Forecast cash expenditure on the DESO budget this year is:

£ million

	Expenditure	Receipts	Net operating costs
1999–2000	45.225	32.807	12.418

The DESO budget has not yet been set for later years.

These net operating costs are more than offset by benefits to the Defence budget, estimated at over £400 million a year, arising from DESO's activities. These benefits include an overall reduction in overhead costs for UK Procurement as a result of export orders, and receipts from Commercial Exploitation Levy and disposal of surplus MOD equipment.

Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111731]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from M. J. Roycroft to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 7 March 2000:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence to list the targets for the Defence Clothing and Textiles Agency (DCTA) for 1998–99 which were and were not achieved, together with the factors affecting the outcome and the action taken by the Agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000. As Chief Executive of DCTA, I have been asked by the Secretary of State to furnish a reply.

The 1998/99 Key Targets were announced in the House of Commons on 8 April 1998. A summary of the Agency's achievement against these appears in the DCTA Annual Report and Accounts 1998/99 that was published in July 1999. Copies are available in the House of Commons Library.

All Key Targets were met, apart from Key Target 3 which was "to exceed 90% of customers' perceived satisfaction of requirements." In a Customer Survey in December 1998 by the Defence Analytical Services Agency (DASA) on DCTA's behalf, the Agency scored 87%—missing the target by 3%. Notwithstanding that the target was missed and that we continued to try to improve, 87% is an extremely high achievement by industry standards. Further details are in Annex A.

Measures taken during 1999–2000 to attempt to improve performance against Key Targets include the further development of DCTA's helpdesk, shorter pipeline times, enhanced availability, and continued improved communications with our customers, to ensure we are providing the quality and quantity of items which they require.

I trust this response will answer your questions satisfactorily.

Serial	Description of key target	Performance
KT3	To exceed 90% of customers' perceived satisfaction of requirements	Not Achieved. The Agency achieved a score of 87% overall customer satisfaction in an independent survey, missing the testing target by only 3%. There were many positive comments, all indicating a customer perception that DCTA had improved availability, fitness for purpose and communication during the period. Further development of the helpdesk, communication, shorter pipeline times and maintained improvement of product availability were the major lessons learned, from which several business initiatives have been implemented by FY 99/00. A more detailed Customer survey is being conducted in the present year (FY 99/00) to assess the impact of these initiatives.

Defence Dental Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Dental Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111733]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Dental Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from I. G. McIntyre to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 7 March 2000:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning the 1998–99 achievement against targets as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive for the Defence Dental Agency.

The Key Targets published for 1998–99 are listed below.

Key Target 1:

From within available personnel resources, achieve 100% of required professional and military trained personnel, at the specified readiness for deployment in support of the National Contingency Force.

Key Target 2:

To achieve an overall increase in dental fitness to 75% for Service personnel.

Key Target 3:

Measures are to be implemented to target dental treatment towards clinical priority groups leading to a zero increase in the Treatment Needs performance indicator.

Key Target 4:

To reduce the percentage of failed appointments with Dental Officers and the time wasted by such failures by 10%. To reduce the percentage of failed appointments with Dental Hygienists and the time wasted by such failures by 25%.

Key Target 5:

To limit the number of personnel in dental fitness category D4 (not inspected for 12 months or more) to 15% of the total service population.

Key Target 6:

To achieve a success rate for Dental Support Specialists training of 95% of the requirement which is determined by single Service manning supply.

Of these targets 4 were achieved but Key Targets 2 and 4 were not met.

For Key Target 2 the overall level of dental fitness achieved at the end of the reporting year was 72%. When the target was set, as had been previously recognised for 1997/99, we were not resourced to meet this target for the Army. It was therefore set as a purely "aspirational target". In 1999–2000 the aim is to maintain an agreed level of fitness as may be decided by mutual agreement with each of the Agency's three single Service customers.

For Key Target 4 it was recognised that this parameter was not wholly or even primarily within the control of the Defence Dental Agency and this target does not therefore feature in the 1999–2000 targets set for the Agency.

Logistics Information Services Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Logistics Information Services agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111768]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 7 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Logistic Information Systems Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from P. A. Flanagan to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 7 March 2000]:

1. I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about Key Targets in 1998/99 and 1999/00 as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Logistic Information Systems Agency (LISA).

2. Much of the information requested is contained in the Annual Report and Accounts 1998/99 (HC688), a copy of which is in the Library of the House. However, for clarity, it is repeated below.

3. Your first question asked about those targets for 1998–99 which were, and were not, achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case. The details for this are as follows;

a. The first Key Target was, "To deliver the agreed levels of service within budget levels defined by the customer". This target was achieved.

b. The second Key Target was, "To achieve a reduction in unit cost of 3% by April 1999". This target was also achieved.

c. The third Key Target was in three parts, that is, "To improve delivery performance to customer requirements such that".

i. "95% of Requests For Change are assessed within 7 days". This target was not achieved. Measures taken to reduce assessment intervals included an increase in the number of Personal Computers with access to RED BOX (the Service Management tool-set) and associated training programme to educate LISA Customer Service Managers in the effective use of the package in the progression of RFCs. These measures, together with the identification and elimination of bottlenecks in the process, secured a very substantial improvement in performance from 67.21% in the previous year achieving 92.6% by the end of March 1999. Actions taken to improve target achievement performance in 1999/00 include exploitation of new features offered by the latest release of RED BOX, and a continuation of the RED BOX training programme. The latter has the objective of improving use and perception of the package and increasing its acceptance throughout the Agency as a significant means of improving performance.

ii. The average period required for Request for Change authorisation is reduced by 10%. This target was achieved.

iii. "85% of Requests For Change are moved from the Tasking Phase to the Implementation Phase within 90 days". This target was achieved.

4. In addition, a new, and significant, means to improve performance is the implementation of Resource Accounting and Budgeting (RAB). As a result of this, Customer-Supplier Agreements are being used to enable the customers themselves to define the outputs required from the Agency. For example, this has enabled LISA to develop one of the targets from one of unit cost to one that now commit the Agency to delivering requirements defined by the customers, but at 97% of the cost of the Agreement to which the customer has agreed and contracted.

Defence Analytical Services Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Analytical Services Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111727]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Analytical Services Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from C. Youngson to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 7 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Under Secretary of State for Defence asking for the target performances of the Defence Analytical Services Agency for 1998–99 and improved target achievement performance in 1999–2000. As Chief Executive this falls within my area of responsibility.

The 1998–1999 Key Targets for the Defence Analytical Services Agency were announced to Parliament by the then Minister for the Armed Forces on 19 May 1998 (Official Report, Column 330). As reported in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–1999, which were laid before Parliament and placed in the House of Commons Library on 26 July 1999 (Ref HC 700), all these Key Targets were met. For your information, I attach copies of the relevant pages of the Report. The Agency's Key Targets for 1999–2000 were also set out in the Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–1999 and announced to Parliament by the then Minister for the Armed Forces on 9 June 1999 (Official Report, Columns 322–333). The Agency's Owner, the Principal Finance Officer for the Ministry of Defence, sets these targets each year with the help of his Advisory Board, made up of all the Agency's major customers and members from outside the Ministry of Defence with a thorough understanding of the Agency's business. The Advisory Board agreed that the targets for 1999–2000 were an extremely challenging measure of business success. The Agency uses the Business Excellence Model to help ensure continuous improvement in all aspects of its business.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Biological and Chemical Weapons

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what measures have been put in place since July 1999 to protect British forces deployed overseas from attack by biological and chemical weapons; [112972]

(2) what new equipment for detecting, identifying and monitoring biological and chemical hazards has been procured since the publication of his Department's paper, Defending against the Threat from Biological and Chemical Weapons. [112969]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The Joint NBC Regiment, created as a result of the Strategic Defence Review, achieved an Interim Operational Capability last December. It provides, at very high readiness, a capability for biological detection, nuclear and chemical survey and decontamination. The Regiment has elements deployed to Kuwait manning the Prototype Biological Detection System protecting the airbase at Ali Al Salem.

With regard to new equipment, since last summer three Interim Naval Biological Detection Systems have been accepted into service. We have also placed a manufacturing contract for chemical agent monitors which are designed to work inside a collective protection environment. User trials are due to take place this month and this equipment will be brought into service later this year. In addition, a contract has also been let for the manufacture of Man-portable Chemical Agent Detectors. Lastly, I refer the hon. Member to the answer which my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence gave him on 29 October 1999, Official Report, column 1005W.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military units involved in biological and chemical defence tasks; and what are the operating costs he is meeting in each case in the (a) current and (b) next financial year. [112971]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The units dedicated to chemical and biological defence tasks are the Defence NBC Centre (comprising the Defence NBC Headquarters and the NBC School), the Joint NBC Regiment and the Royal Yeomanry.

The provision made for the operating costs of these units in this financial years is:

	£ million
Defence NBC Centre	3.2
Joint NBC Regiment	5.0
Royal Yeomanry	1.9

The budgets for financial year 2000–01 have not yet been finalised.

Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what factors underlay the decision not to authorise road use of the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD within the UK. [111772]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The MK1 version of the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD was developed in 1995–96 to meet an urgent operational requirement in the Balkans. It is essentially a fuel tanker with a number of design features to improve its manoeuvrability in difficult terrain. The vehicle was exempted from full compliance with the Construction and Use Regulations under Schedule 1, Article 6 of The Motor Vehicles (Authorisation of Special Types) General Order 1979. This Order authorises the Secretary of State for Defence to use specified vehicles, notwithstanding that such vehicles do not comply in all respects with the requirements of the Construction and Use Regulations. The principal areas on non-compliance related to the absence of both a speed limiter and an anti-lock braking system (ABS). While these factors did not make the vehicle unsafe, the vehicles' lack of full compliance with UK legislation led to the decision not to authorise road use within the UK. A modification programme to bring all 34 MK1 vehicles up to full compliance has begun. All MK2 vehicles are fully compliant.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the arrangements for driver training for the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD. [111828]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: Prior to 1998 the vehicle was deployed in the Balkans without any formal vehicle-specific driver training having taken place in the UK. Nominated drivers were, however, required to hold the necessary civilian licences and a Hazardous Materials qualification before being trained on the vehicle in the Balkans under the guidance of a qualified driving instructor and an experienced driver from an outgoing Unit. Since 1998, pre-deployment training on the MK1 vehicle has been carried out by qualified military driving instructors at the Army School of Petroleum at Westmoor in Dorset. Training on the MK2 is provided through a contract with Multidrive, the manufacturers of the vehicle. Further training and instruction continues to be given in-theatre in the Balkans by operators experienced in the vehicles' use in the local environment.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the accidents involving the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD attributable to (a) mechanical failure, (b) driver error and (c) defective maintenance. [111774]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: No accidents involving the Foden Thompson Carmichael Multi Wheel Drive vehicle have been attributed to either mechanical failure or defective maintenance. Driver error has been assessed as a contributory factor in eleven accidents.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) fatalities and (b) other injuries have occurred in accidents involving the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD. [111827]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: There have been three accidents involving the Foden Thompson Carmichael Multi Wheel Drive vehicle that have resulted in fatalities or injuries. The first, on 12 April 1996, resulted in serious injuries to two soldiers. The second, on 7 July 1997, resulted in the deaths of two soldiers. In the third accident, on 22 June 1998, a soldier suffered a slight injury. All three accidents occurred in Bosnia.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement regarding the mechanical problems experienced by units using the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD. [111826]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: No significant mechanical problems have been experienced.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what problems have been identified with the (a) gearbox and (b) braking systems of the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD. [111775]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: There is no evidence of any technical or mechanical problems with either the gearbox or the braking systems across the Foden Thompson Carmichael Multi Wheel Drive vehicle fleet. An inquiry following a fatal road traffic accident in 1997 raised a concern that there was a possibility for a clip within the vehicle's gearbox to become dislodged as a result of excessive wear. This might cause the gearbox to slip into neutral despite a gear being selected. A check was made across the fleet but no problems were discovered and no such occurrences have been reported. The accident inquiry concluded that there was no evidence that this was a contributory factor and concluded that there was insufficient evidence to establish conclusively the cause of the accident.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the safety record of the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD. [111825]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The vehicle has coped well in operations in arduous terrain and harsh weather conditions over the past three years. While the two serious accidents are extremely regrettable, the accident rate for this vehicle is not considered excessive. The vehicle continues to perform well and is considered safe in all regards.

Mr. Swayne: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the theatres where the Foden Thompson Carmichael MWD is deployed for operational use. [111773]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The MWD is currently deployed to both Balkan theatres, Bosnia and Kosovo.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's civilian personnel are employed in Scotland; where they are employed; how many are at each location; and which agencies employ them. [112857]

Married Quarters (Scotland)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many married quarters are available to forces families in Scotland; where they are; and what are their occupancy levels. [112837]

Dr. Moonie: 800 properties are in the course of disposal leaving a working stock of 5,033 properties, 88.5 per cent. of which are occupied. The main locations are:

Rosyth (152), Edinburgh (614), Helensburgh (464), Leuchars (621), Kinloss (810), Lossiemouth (761), Glasgow area (272) and other minor locations (760) giving 4,454 currently in occupation.

HMS Spartan

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when HMS Spartan's refit will be completed; and when the vessel will be operational. [112838]

Dr. Moonie: HMS Spartan is planned to complete her refit in the summer of 2001 and to be operational, following trials, in early 2002.

Clyde Naval Base

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of his Department's civilian personnel are employed (a) at HMNB Clyde, (b) at HMNB Clyde exclusively on maintaining and servicing nuclear propelled submarines, (c) at HMNB Clyde exclusively on maintaining conventional surface vessels and (d) on work on both submarines and surface vessels. [112855]

Mr. Spellar: As at 29 February 2000, HMNB Clyde employed a total of 3,277 civilian personnel.

The Department of Engineering within HMNB Clyde has 198 civilian staff who would be considered to be employed solely on maintaining and servicing both submarines and surface vessels. Due to the re-structuring of the Department in recent years and the flexibility of the workforce that now exists, all would be expected to maintain and service both submarines and surface vessels, to some extent, as might be required.

For the reasons stated above it is not possible to give a definitive answer to the split of tasks between surface vessels and submarines.

Faslane

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the maximum number of surface vessels that were accommodated at Faslane at any one time in the past five years; what were the types and numbers of vessels accommodated on that occasion; and when that was. [112856]

Dr. Moonie: On 6 June 1999, there were 30 surface ships accommodated at HM Naval Base Clyde (Faslane). They were:

Two in number Invincible class aircraft carriers

Two in number Destroyers/Frigates

12 in Minor War vessels

Six Fast patrol craft

One Castle class offshore patrol vessel

Four P2000 class patrol boats

Three Support vessels.

Costs

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what are the costs of salaries for all his Department's civilians in Scotland, by agency and in total; [112853]

(2) what were the total costs of each of the defence installations, including operating costs, maintenance and civilian and services salaries, in the last year for which figures are available. [112934]

Dr. Moonie: The information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Depleted Uranium

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many veterans he expects to be tested for depleted uranium; what will be the cost; and if he will make a statement. [112968]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: To address Gulf veterans' concerns, on 8 September 1999, the Ministry of Defence offered to arrange independent testing for Depleted Uranium to those Gulf veterans who had their urine tested for Depleted Uranium in Canada. This offer must not be taken as an indication that the Ministry of Defence believes veterans do have high levels of Depleted Uranium in their bodies. Rather it is something the Ministry of Defence would like to do so that we can move forward from a firm scientific basis. A draft protocol under which this testing will take place is with veterans' representatives for comment. If it is agreed, we believe that approximately 30 veterans would be eligible for testing. My Department estimates that the cost of obtaining and testing a sample of veteran's urine will be approximately £3,500 per person, excluding Ministry of Defence overheads.

RAF Yearbook

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what editorial control the MoD Publications Clearance Branch exercises over the Royal Air Force Yearbook. [112451]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 1 March 2000]: The Publications Clearance Branch (Air) does not exercise direct editorial control over the RAF Yearbook. However, contributions to the Yearbook from serving personnel are subject to the normal publications clearance procedure laid down in Queen's Regulations. This requires them to submit potential articles for clearance to the Publications Clearance Branch (Air) in advance of publication.

The Director of Corporate Communications (RAF) also co-operates very closely with the RAF Benevolent Fund during the production of the Yearbook and will see all the text before publication.

ASRAAM

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects the integration of ASRAAM missiles into Jaguar GR3A to be completed; and if he will make a statement. [112436]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 1 March 2000]: Following an assessment of the cost effectiveness and operational benefits of this project, we have decided not to proceed with integration of the ASRAAM onto Jaguar GR3A.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total number of service personnel diagnosed to be suffering with asbestosis or asbestos-related diseases in each of the last five years for which figures are available; and how many deaths occurred in each service branch from asbestos-related diseases over the same period. [113327]

Mr. Spellar: Since 1 January 1995 there have been no serving service personnel who died or have been reported as having been diagnosed with asbestosis or asbestos-related disease in the last five years.

HMS Cambridge

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out his proposals for the future of HMS Cambridge, near Plymouth. [111254]

Mr. Spellar: Following the cessation of shore-based live firing training from HMS Cambridge due to increased use of computer simulation, my Department has been undertaking a detailed study into the future of the establishment. I have not yet received advice on the findings of the study and have taken no decisions about the future of HMS Cambridge, but hope to be in a position to do so in the next few months. Any decision will be subject to formal consultation in the usual way.

Parliamentary Questions

Mr. Oaten: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many questions to his Department tabled for written answer on a named day during the session 1998–99 were answered (a) on the named day, (b) within one week of a named day, (c) within one month of a named day, (d) within three months of a named day and (e) after three months of a named day. [106480]

Dr. Moonie: During the Session 1998–99, 1,004 questions were tabled to my Department for written answer on a named day. Of this total, 552 were answered on the named day, 834 were answered within one week of a named day, 983 were answered within one month of a named day and 994 were answered within three months of a named day. All 1,004 were answered after three months.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Court Closures and Amalgamations

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many, and which (a) county courts and (b) magistrates courts in England and Wales have been closed since 1 February 1994, indicating the date of each closure; how many and which justices benches in England and Wales have been amalgamated since 1 February 1994, indicating the date of each amalgamation; what were the financial savings achieved by the above closures and amalgamations, identifying the effect in financial terms for the relevant police force, legal representation costs and witness expenses. [112772]

Jane Kennedy: Lists of (a) county court and (b) magistrates court closures, and (c) justices bench amalgamations are as set out.

(a) The list of county court closures and the following paragraph have been supplied by the Chief Executive of the Court Service. Fifty-five county courts in England and Wales have been closed or amalgamated since 1 February 1994. The financial savings to the Court Service are in terms of rent and accommodation charges, running costs such as staff salaries, telephone, postage, maintenance of buildings and judicial expense. There have been no savings in financial terms in respect of police forces as this is not relevant to the county courts. The Lord Chancellor does not keep statistics on what representation costs or witness expenses may have been saved through county court closures. Precise figures on all the savings accruing from county court closures since 1994 are not specifically kept by the Court Service. However, a broad conservative estimate of accommodation charges saved and general running costs would indicate a minimum saving of £6,000,000 over the six year period.

(b) Eighty-one magistrates courts have been closed in England and Wales since September 1995.

Magistrates courthouses are owned or leased by the paying authority on behalf of the magistrates courts service. They are not Crown property. The Lord Chancellor's Department has conducted an annual survey of magistrates courthouses since 1995, but holds no records prior to that date.

(c) Since 1 February 1994, in England and Wales, 181 justices benches (or petty sessions areas) have been amalgamated to form 78 new justices benches.

Under the provisions of the Justices of the Peace Act 1997, Magistrates Courts Committees are responsible for the provision of an efficient and effective service to court users. When determining the future of its courthouses, it is for each Committee to identify the scope of its own criteria for the number and location of magistrates courts within its area and the possible financial savings. The financial saving achieved by the closures and amalgamations is not collected centrally and could be obtained only from each Magistrates Courts Committee at a disproportionate cost.

Magistrates (Training)

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what training magistrates receive on sentencing; and if he will make a statement. [112806]

Mr. Lock: Training of magistrates is the responsibility of individual Magistrates Courts Committees within a framework set on behalf of the Lord Chancellor by the Judicial Studies Board, an independent, non-departmental public body. Magistrates are trained to approach sentencing in a structured way, taking into account a range of factors including the nature and seriousness of the offence. Sentencing is a matter for judicial discretion taking into account the statutory framework, any Court of Appeal sentencing guideline judgments and other relevant case law. Magistrates are encouraged to use the sentencing guidelines published by the Magistrates Association, with the approval of the Lord Chancellor and the Lord Chief Justice, in reaching their decisions.

The Human Rights Act 1998 and the revised sentencing powers in the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 create new challenges for the magistracy but the Government, which is committed to the lay magistracy continuing to play a significant role in our system of justice, is confident that magistrates will rise to those challenges.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Euro

Mr. Portillo: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much money has been spent to date by his Department and by bodies funded by his Department in connection with the National Changeover Plan; on what headings this money has been spent; and how much his Department plans to spend on implementing the plan over the next 12 months. [112140]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 29 February 2000]: I refer the right hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Economic Secretary to the Treasury on 29 February 2000, Official Report, column 233W.

Senator Pinochet

Mr. Paterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many public employees have been involved in legal work relating to Senator Pinochet since October 1998. [113512]

Mr. Straw: At any one time two Home Office lawyers had significant involvement in the case. A Treasury Solicitor lawyer had conduct of the case for litigation purposes, and lawyers in the Crown Prosecution Service, the Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers and the Foreign and Commonwealth Office were from time to time significantly involved. Lawyers from other Government Departments have also played a role.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the total cost to the (a) central and (b) local government of the containment of Senator Pinochet broken down into (a) police, (b) legal and (c) accommodation costs. [113600]

Mr. Straw: For the information requested, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my noble Friend the Under-Secretary on 2 March 2000, Official Report, House of Lords, column WA87.

Senator Pinochet's accommodation costs were not met from public funds.

Vivisection Investigation

Dr. Ladyman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement about the outcome of his investigation into allegations made by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection against Harlan-Hill Crest. [113893]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I have today placed in the Library copies of the Home Office investigative report into allegations which were made available to the Home Office by the British Union for the Abolition of Vivisection (BUAV) on 29 June 1999. The BUAV's allegations were based on the evidence of a sympathiser working undercover at the establishment. The establishment is designated under the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986.

I received the Chief Inspector's report on 17 December after a thorough investigation into a complex series of allegations. Generally, the establishment was found to be well run and the level of compliance generally good. I did, however, take action against one breach of a condition of certification—that two animal rooms were not identified in documentation as having been checked as required on two dates during the last two years. The Certificate holder received an admonition for this apparent lapse and I sought reassurances from management about staffing levels. These have been given.

Since Christmas 1999, officials have been arranging with the company, its customers and key staff, to lift confidentiality of material in the report whose disclosure would have been contrary to Section 24 of the 1986 Act, as being provided in confidence. A small number of areas remain censored because they represent commercially sensitive or personnel information which cannot be disclosed.

The greater number of blocked-out areas in the report stem from the BUAV not lifting the confidentiality of material stemming from the undercover investigator's videotapes, diary and interview with the Inspectorate in time for publication this week. When we indicated that we would publish the document in this form, BUAV then indicated late yesterday that they might be prepared to lift the confidentiality restrictions on some parts of the report. My officials will contact them again today to ask them to lift their restrictions.

The report was disclosed to the Animal Procedures Committee on 9 February for information. The Committee has not had opportunity to discuss the report, nor are Ministers expressly seeking advice on its content or the action taken since the investigation was completed.

Immigration and Asylum (Penalties)

Mr. Paul Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made on the production of a code of practice in relation to the civil penalty provisions of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999; and when implementation of those provisions will commence. [113951]

Mrs. Roche: Clandestine entry into the United Kingdom, particularly in road haulage vehicles, has become a major abuse of the immigration control in recent years. The number of clandestine entrants identified is currently running at about 2,000 each month and the Government are determined to take action to tackle this growing problem.

Part II of the Immigration and Asylum Act 1999 provides for a penalty for each clandestine entrant carried to be levied on the person or persons responsible. It also provides for the detention in certain circumstances of the transporter or vehicle in which the clandestine arrived against payment of the penalty.

The civil penalty is an important measure to enable us to deal effectively with an escalating problem. It will be implemented on 3 April 2000 in relation to clandestine entrants arriving in road vehicles.

We have consulted widely with a number of representative bodies on a Code of Practice for vehicles to prevent the carriage of clandestine entrants. The draft Code of Practice for Vehicles, which has been amended to take account of comments expressed during the consultation process, was laid before Parliament on 3 March and will come into force on 3 April.

Drug Dealers

Mr. Healey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the effectiveness of police local drugs units in bringing to court hard drugs dealers. [112259]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The police have a key role in the Government's anti-drugs strategy working with other enforcement agencies to stifle the availability of illegal drugs on our streets. The drug problem will not be the same in each force area, and it is an operational matter for each Chief Officer of Police to decide the most effective way to tackle drug dealing in his or her force area. It is for the Crown Prosecution Service to decide whether to prosecute those charged with an offence.

Tough targets have been set under the Government's drugs strategy, significantly to reduce access to all drugs among young people, and to reduce access to the drugs which cause the greatest harm—particularly heroin and cocaine—by 25 per cent. by 2005 and by 50 per cent. by 2008. A target for 1999–2000 is to increase by 10 per cent. the number of offenders dealt with for supply offences in respect of Class A drugs.

The latest available statistics show that the number of persons found guilty at court of "dealing" (possession with intent to supply unlawfully and unlawful supply) in heroin, cocaine and crack increased significantly between 1997 and 1998. Detailed information is given in the table.

Persons found guilty at court for offences of unlawful supply/possession with intent to supply unlawfully, involving cocaine/crack, heroin (Great Britain) [1]

Drug/offence	1997	1998
Cocaine
Unlawful supply	218	354

Afghan Hijacking

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current status of those passengers on the recently hijacked Afghan airliner who sought asylum. [113575]

Mr. Straw: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Lincoln (Gillian Merron) on 1 March 2000, Official Report, columns 289–91W, in which I provided details of my consideration of the 44 applications for asylum.

Racist Incidents

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the most recent statistics for reported racist incidents for each of England's police forces. [113549]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information on the number of racist incidents that were recorded by the police, by police force area, was published in December 1999 in "Statistics on Race and the Criminal Justice System", a copy of which is in the Library.

Racially Aggravated Offences

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what percentage of racially aggravated offences have resulted in acquittals since the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 came into force; and how many defendants this involved, broken down by ethnic group; [113367]

(2) how many charges relating to racially aggravated offences as defined by section 28 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 have been made since the Act came into force; and how many victims were alleged to be affected by the offences broken down by ethnic group. [113332]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information collected centrally indicates that 10,982 racially aggravated offences were recorded by the police in the period 1 April 1999 to 30 September 1999. No information is collected on the number of charges made for these offences, the number of victims involved or their ethnic group. 745 defendants were prosecuted in magistrates courts for racially aggravated offences in the period October 1998 to 30 June 1999 of which 261 (35 per cent.) had their prosecution terminated early and 31 (4 per cent.) had their charge dismissed. No information is available on the ethnicity of the defendants.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints of racially aggravated offences have been made against police officers since the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 came into force. [113335]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Information is not routinely collected centrally on the occupations of people accused of crime. But there were 709 complaints of racial discrimination recorded against the police in 1998–99.

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many racially aggravated offences (1) charged by the police have been discontinued by the Crown Prosecution Service (a) before and (b) after the case reached a magistrates court; and how many victims, broken down by ethnic group, were alleged to be affected by the offences charged; [113333]

(2) have been added as further offences to other charges preferred against defendants by the Crown Prosecution Service since the Crime and Disorder Act 1998 came into effect; and how many victims were alleged to be affected by the offences charged, broken down by ethnic group. [113334]

The Solicitor-General: I have been asked to reply.

The information sought is not currently available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. However, the Crown Prosecution Service has been monitoring the prosecution of racist crime since 1995. The monitoring has been substantially revised in order to capture a wider range of information as a result of the new offences of racially aggravated crimes created by the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. The first full year of the revised scheme ends on 31 March 2000 and the Crown Prosecution Service aims to publish a report in the autumn. At that time the figures sought regarding charges for racially aggravated offences will, it is anticipated, be available. The monitoring scheme is solely offence based and does not record information about victims of racially aggravated crime either by number or ethnic group.

Prostitutes' Cards

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what responses he has received to the consultation paper, New Measures to Control Prostitutes' Cards in Phone Boxes; and if he will make a statement. [113331]

Mr. Charles Clarke: We have received 60 responses to the consultation paper from local authorities, police staff associations, local residents' groups, telephone operators, organisations representing sex workers and members of the public.

We hope to make an announcement shortly on the outcome of the consultation exercise and our proposals for action.

Dorset and Hampshire Police

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many officers were serving in (a) the Dorset Constabulary and (b) the Hampshire Constabulary on 31 March 1997; and how many were serving on the latest date for which figures are available. [113037]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information is set out in the table.

Dorset Police and Hampshire Constabulary

EU Justice and Home Affairs

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the domestic legislative implications of the individual reasons identified in the Portuguese Presidency's Programme of Work in the Field of Justice and Home Affairs. [113070]

Mr. Charles Clarke: None of the measures specified in the Portuguese Presidency Work Programme in the field of Justice and Home Affairs has been finalised, and most are in the early stages of discussion. It is not possible, until an individual proposal has been finally adopted, to identify the extent of any legislative implications in the United Kingdom.

However, in accordance with the terms of reference of the Scrutiny Committees of both Houses of Parliament, the Government deposit Explanatory Memoranda on all draft European Union proposals. Part of the Explanatory Memorandum covers the possible implications to United Kingdom Law should the proposal be adopted in its draft form.

Balloting Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what ways organisations offering balloting services are regulated; and if he will make a statement. [113032]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary is responsible only for legislation affecting the conduct of elections for Westminster parliamentary, European parliamentary and local elections. He has no remit to legislate the way that balloting is conducted by outside organisations, such as trade unions and political parties. This is a matter for them to agree within their own organisation and subject to any existing legislation.

Leicestershire Police

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police officers Leicestershire Police Authority area has had in post in each year between 1992–93 and the last year for which figures are available. [113168]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The information requested is set out in the table.

Asylum

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many appeals against refusal to grant political asylum were waiting to be heard on 1 February. [113084]

Jane Kennedy: I have been asked to reply.

There were a total of 3,825 asylum appeals outstanding before adjudicators as at 31 January 2000.

There were in addition 2,258 asylum appeals outstanding before the Tribunal as at 31 January 2000.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Genetically Modified Organisms

Mr. Alan Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions for what reasons genetically-modified winter oilseed rape planted, pursuant to his decision to vary consent reference 98/R19/18 was permitted to remain in the ground after the order of the High Court. [108005]

Mr. Meacher: The Consent Order issued by the High Court, which was agreed and signed by all parties, did not order the destruction of the crop. The Government and the consent holder (AgrEvo UK Ltd.) indicated to the Court that the crops, which had been sown in good faith, will be treated as if a valid consent was in place in respect of them. In accordance with the terms of the Consent Order, the Government will continue to regulate the crops on the same terms and subject to the same conditions as if a new consent had been lawfully granted.

Rural Transport

Mr. Kidney: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how he plans to evaluate the effectiveness of the current three year spending programme on rural transport services. [112513]

Mr. Hill: The current three year spending programme on rural transport includes the Rural Bus Subsidy Grant, the Rural Bus Challenge Fund, the Rural Transport Partnership Scheme and the Rural Transport Development Fund.

We are monitoring on an annual basis the impact of the Rural Bus Subsidy Grant. This analysis has shown that in the first year over 1,800 new or improved services were introduced in England. Monitoring of Rural Bus Challenge projects is based on an analysis of annual progress and end of project reports.

The Rural Transport Partnership scheme and the Rural Transport Development Fund are administered by the Countryside Agency on the Department's behalf. The Countryside Agency will be evaluating these schemes during 2000–2001.

Social Security Act 1992

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has requested under section 139A of the Social Security Act 1992; and if he will make a statement. [112652]

Ms Armstrong: None. I refer to the answer given by the Under-Secretary of State for Social Security, my hon. Friend the Member for Wallasey (Angela Eagle), on 7 March 2000, Official Report, column 613W.

Abandoned Vehicles

Mr. McDonnell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what representations he has received calling for reform of the system for removing abandoned vehicles from public highways. [112994]

Mr. Mullin: My Department has received letters from a number of local authorities, members of the public and other interested bodies about the system for the removal of abandoned vehicles. Correspondents have expressed concern about the financial burden the removal of such vehicles places on local authorities, the period of notice authorities must give before removing vehicles, acts of vandalism associated with abandoned vehicles, and the difficulty of tracing the vehicles' owners. They have also suggested a variety of changes to the current system intended to address these concerns.

Playing Fields

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many times since May 1997 his Department has overruled the advice of Sport England not to grant permission for the sale of a playing field. [112953]

Mr. Raynsford: Sport England are consulted on planning applications for the development of playing fields but have no role in decisions about whether or not playing fields may be sold. Their role in the referral of planning applications to my Department came into effect on 23 December 1998 under the Town and Country Planning (Playing Fields)(England) Direction 1998. Since then, 18 applications have been referred to the Secretary of State. Of these, one has been called in by him for his own determination and 14 have been left to the local authority to determine. The remainder are under consideration. Of the 14 cases which were left to the local planning authority to determine, all but one involved the development of new or expanded educational or sporting facilities at existing schools or colleges. In each of these cases, the area of land which would be developed was a very minor part of the overall playing field provision.

Travelling Showpeople

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what percentage of local planning authorities' local plans or unitary development plans include provision for sites for travelling showpeople, of the type provided for in the guidance contained in paragraph 6 of Department of the Environment Planning Circular 22/91. [113267]

Mr. Raynsford: This information is not available.

Mr. Bennett: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many applications for planning permission for living accommodation for travelling showpeople were received by local authorities in each year since 1985; and how many of the above applications were (a) granted by local planning authorities, (b) turned down by local planning authorities, (c) granted on appeal, (d) turned down on appeal and (e) called in by the Secretary of State, broken down into figures relating to the regions corresponding to each regional planning conference. [113266]

Mr. Raynsford: The Department does not hold statistics of planning applications or local planning authority decisions on the basis requested.

The regional breakdown of planning appeals (under section 78 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990) relating to living accommodation for travelling showpeople between 1990 and 1999 is set out in the table. In the 10 years for which records are available, our records show a total of 62 appeals. Of these, 28 were allowed and 34 were dismissed. There are no records available for 1985 to 1990.

No applications relating to living accommodation for travelling showpeople were called in by the Secretary of State during the period for which records are available.

Heathland Habitats (Dorset)

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what guidance his Department offers about resolving conflicts arising from the EU requirement to restore heathland habitats in Dorset and to retain trees as a habitat for woodland birds and as an amenity and landscape feature. [113036]

Mr. Mullin: None. However, English Nature, the Government's scientific advisers, and the Forestry Commission are working closely together to ensure delivery of obligations under the Habitats Directive and of the Lowland Heathland Habitat Action Plan. In September 1999, English Nature issued guidance to its local teams on how to resolve such issues. The Forestry Commission has similarly drawn up preliminary guidance as to how its staff should consider the potential conflicts when considering felling licences.

Asbestos Removal Companies

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many licensed asbestos removal companies are operating in the UK in the last year for which figures are available; and how many had their licence revoked. [113325]

Mr. Meacher: At 1 March 2000, there were 751 asbestos licence holders on the database maintained by HSE. Not all licensees are actively engaged in asbestos removal or associated work on a regular basis.

In the period 1 April 1999 to 1 March 2000, some 20 licensees have been warned that HSE has considered revocation of their licence and will take that step unless there is an improvement in performance. No licences were revoked.

Railtrack Land (Allotments)

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the status of land owned by Railtrack and Rail Property Ltd. in use as allotments. [113076]

Mr. Hill: Land in use as allotments and owned by Railtrack, a private company, and Rail Property Ltd. has no special status. Statutory protection of allotment land does not apply to privately owned land or land owned by a public body when that body—such as Rail Property Ltd.—is not a local authority.

Rail Property Ltd.

Mr. Lepper: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on the legal relationship between his Department and Rail Property Ltd. [113075]

Mr. Hill: Rail Property Ltd. is a wholly owned subsidiary of the British Railways Board (BRB) which is one of the nationalised industries sponsored by the Department. The British Railways Board now operates as part of the shadow Strategic Rail Authority (sSRA). Subject to the passage of the Transport Bill currently before Parliament the SRA, when formally established, will incorporate the functions of the BRB.

Air Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what recent steps he has taken to ensure the aircraft flying over London into Heathrow have sufficient fuel on board. [113039]

Mr. Mullin: Responsibility for the safety regulation of airlines, including compliance with minimum fuel requirements, lies with the country in which the airline is based. The UK Civil Aviation Authority ensures that UK airlines have effective minimum fuel policies for all flights and checks fuel records when auditing airlines. Regulatory authorities for foreign airlines must ensure that their airlines meet at least the international standards for minimum fuel levels.

We have procedures in place to check that foreign operated aircraft flying to the UK are being maintained and operated in compliance with international standards. These include targeted inspections by the Civil Aviation Authority (CAA) of aircraft from countries where safety oversight has been questioned. Last summer, following an allegation that one airline had operated into Heathrow airport with low fuel levels on a number of occasions, we targeted a number of inspections on long haul operators from the Far East. We asked the particular operator concerned to provide us with weekly reports of fuel levels of their aircraft on arrival at Heathrow and this has continued as a condition of their operating permit; the reports have been satisfactory. We will investigate fully any reports of problems with other operators.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what requirements exist for non-departmental public bodies responsible to his Department to carry out an environmental impact statement for their respective activities. [113306]

Mr. Raynsford: Regulations require environmental impact assessment for certain public and private projects that are likely to have a significant effect on the environment. These apply to activities proposed by non-departmental public bodies responsible to my Department in the same way as those proposed by any other body.

Combined Heat and Power

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he is taking to encourage the expansion of combined heat and power generation capacity. [113057]

Mr. Meacher: The Government's action to exempt Good Quality Combined Heat and Power from the Climate Change Levy is the strongest evidence of this Government's commitment to the wider use of CHP. It is also intended to be one of the energy technologies eligible for the proposed Enhanced Capital Allowances scheme under the Climate Change Levy package. The announcement on 6 March that electricity generating plant and machinery in all Good Quality CHP schemes will be de-rated from 1 April 2001, further strengthens Government support for CHP.

We are implementing a CHP Quality Assurance programme to enhance the quality of CHP and determine eligibility to a range of benefits, and will shortly consult on a new strategy to achieve our target of at least 10,000 MWe of CHP by 2010.

We continue to work closely with industry to ensure the fullest support for CHP growth. On 17 May I will be launching the CHP Club, an integrated service under the Energy Efficiency Best Practice programme, to help new and potential CHP users exploit the positive environment which this Government have put in place.

Rat Infestations

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions further to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 130W, on rats, if he will commission a more detailed assessment of the conditions of drains and sewers near dwellings and their relationship to rat infestations as part of the 2001 English House Condition Survey. [113062]

Mr. Mullin: The 1996 English House Condition Survey (EHCS) included an assessment of observable faults to the drainage system around the dwelling, which surveyors can reasonably be asked to collect as part of a standard house condition survey. Development work is now under way for the 2001 survey and it is highly likely that this will be repeated. However, the EHCS is not an appropriate vehicle for carrying out more detailed investigative work on the overall condition of drains and sewers.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, further to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 130W, on rats, if cracked or defective drain covers would render a dwelling unfit. [113061]

Mr. Mullin: Under the current fitness standard a dwelling can be deemed unfit if it does not have an effective system for the draining of foul, waste and surface water. This tends to be based on an overall assessment of a number of features connected with the drainage system. In relation to the collection and analysis of the English House Condition Survey data, dwellings are not deemed unfit solely because of cracked or defective drain covers.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, further to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 130W, on rats, if dwellings that are unfit as the result of lack of effective drainage are more likely to have rat infestations than those that are unfit on other counts; and if he will make a statement. [113060]

Mr. Mullin: The English House Condition Survey questions related to rodent infestations are analysed in the recent MAFF report "Rodent Infestations in domestic properties in England". Page 11 of the report emphasises that properties with defective drainage systems also tend to be defective in many other aspects. It would not be appropriate to analyse the data to make a distinction between those that are unfit for drainage reasons and those that are unfit for other reasons. This is because the number of dwellings in the sample that are classed as unfit because of problems with drainage is very small, less than 1 per cent. of the total sample.

Ministerial Meetings

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions on what dates in the last year officials and Ministers of his Department have met representatives of the (a) British Road Federation, (b) Road Haulage Association, (c) Freight Transport Association, (d) RAC, (e) AA, (f) Cyclists Touring Club, (g) Pedestrians Association and (h) Transport 2000. [113051]

Mr. Hill: Ministers and officials have formal and informal meetings with representatives of these organisations as necessary; a detailed record could be kept only at disproportionate cost.

Connex

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many Connex train services have (a) run on time, (b) been delayed and (c) been cancelled in the last month. [113173]

Mr. Hill: The shadow Strategic Rail Authority (sSRA) does not monitor the train operating companies' performance in these terms. The sSRA publishes quarterly statistics on punctuality and reliability, the next of which will be published shortly and placed in the Library of the House.

Trafalgar Square (Pedestrianisation)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action his Department has taken to identify potential sources of funding for proposals to partially pedestrianise Trafalgar Square. [113444]

Mr. Hill: The Government fully support the proposal to close the north side of Trafalgar Square to traffic which is included in phase 1 of the World Squares for All Masterplan. We are making up to £2 million available to Westminster City Council for the design of phase 1 of the Masterplan.

Implementation of phase 1 could begin in 2001 and further funding would be a matter for the Mayor of London. Contributions to the cost of implementation could also be sought from the Heritage Lottery Fund and private sector sponsorship.

Rural Poverty

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish his Department's consultation document concerning additional funds to deal with rural poverty. [113476]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 7 March 2000]: As part of the consultation for the forthcoming Rural White Paper, DETR published its discussion document "Rural England" in February 1999. This posed a series of questions on a wide range of rural issues. A summary of the themes arising from this consultation has been published on the DETR internet website.

Rural poverty is one of the issues being addressed in preparing for the Rural White Paper which we expect to publish later this year.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will publish his Department's research into the extent of rural poverty; and what definitions of poverty he has used. [113465]

Mr. Mullin [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Poverty is a complex, multi-dimensional issue, affecting many aspects of people's lives—income, health, housing, the quality of the environment, opportunities to work and learn, and access to services. There is no single reliable measure.

The Countryside Agency, the Government's statutory adviser on social and economic development in rural areas, has been conducting research into indicators of rural disadvantage. The findings of this research are expected to be published in due course. Current information on rural disadvantage is contained in the Agency's "State of the Countryside", a copy of which is in the Library. It is also among the topics covered in The Cabinet Office's "Sharing the Nation's Prosperity" report, which provides information on the economic, social and environmental conditions in the countryside.

Farm Buildings

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to facilitate the conversion of disused farm buildings for residential and other purposes; and if he will make a statement. [113145]

Mr. Raynsford: Planning Policy Guidance (PPG) note 7: Countryside, already positively encourages the re-use and adaptation of rural buildings. I shall be considering whether any revised guidance maybe appropriate in the light of the Performance and Innovation Unit's report "Rural Economies".

China Clay Quarrying

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if the extension of china clay quarrying in Dartmoor is an exceptional circumstance in the sense intended by his own guidance; and what examination of proposals for such quarrying he has conducted. [113573]

Mr. Raynsford: Whether a planning application for an extension of china clay quarrying in Dartmoor comprises an 'exceptional circumstance', as explained in paragraph 4.5 of Planning Policy Guidance Note 7—The Countryside: Environmental Quality and Economic and Social Development, would depend upon the scale, nature and individual circumstances of that proposal.

So far as I am aware, no applications have recently been submitted for new or extended china clay quarrying. If they had, the Dartmoor National Park Authority would be responsible for determining them. The Secretary of State would only examine such an application if he called it in for his own determination or if it came before him on appeal.

I am, however, aware of several applications that have been submitted to both the National Park Authority and to Devon County Council under the old minerals planning permission (OMP) review provisions of the Environment Act 1995. These are for the determination of modern operating and restoration conditions for existing china clay planning permissions within and adjoining the Dartmoor National Park, and not extensions of existing quarrying operations. The local authorities for areas within which these are located are responsible for determining them. As these applications may come before the Secretary of State on appeal, he is unable to comment on their merits.

A35

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what AADT figures were recorded for the Chideock section of the A35 in 1998 and 1999; and what percentage increases are projected for the years 2000 to 2010. [113576]

Mr. Hill: The Annual Average Daily Traffic (AADT) figures in 1998 and 1999 were 13,186 and 13,618 respectively.

DETR forecasts indicate that by 2010, a central traffic growth estimate (which represents an average of low and high estimates) would add a further 20 per cent. to traffic levels.

In the case of the A35 at Chideock this would mean estimated AADT figure in the region of 16,500 vehicles per day by the year 2010.

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will monitor kerbside nitrogen dioxide in Chideock on the A35. [113574]

Mr. Hill: Part IV of the Environment Act 1995 requires local authorities to review and assess the current and likely future air quality in their areas. Local authorities are required to consider whether one or more of the national air quality objectives, as prescribed in regulations, are unlikely to be met by the required date. Objectives have been set for a number of air pollutants including nitrogen dioxide. The Secretary of State has issued guidance on how to undertake such reviews and assessments, including on where and when monitoring of air pollutants is needed. I understand that West Dorset district council will consider monitoring the kerbside nitrogen dioxide in Chideock on the A35, in addition to their existing monitoring sites throughout the area.

Regional Assemblies

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what powers he plans to give to regional assemblies. [113599]

Ms Armstrong: The eight regional assemblies and chambers already established are voluntary bodies. We have no plans to give them statutory powers but we have provided them with important roles specifically in relation to Regional Development Agencies, regional planning guidance, and regional sustainable development frameworks.

Housing Stock

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those local authorities in England which (i) have completed an LSVT of housing stock and (ii) are currently undertaking an LSVT. [113598]

Mr. Mullin: I refer the hon. Member to my answer of 22 February 2000, Official Report, columns 923–25W.

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list the average turn around times between tenants of local authority housing stock for each authority in England. [113597]

Mr. Mullin: Local authorities in England provide estimates of the average time taken to relet their housing stock on their annual Housing Investment Programme (HIP) Operational Information returns. Information reported for lettings during 1998–99 is given in the table. There are variations in the way local authorities maintain lettings records and compile these estimates, and comparisons between authorities should be treated with caution.

DETR Housing Investment Programme returns 1999

A27

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what funds will be available for the study of traffic congestion on the A27 in the Worthing area due later this year; and when the study will be carried out. [113596]

Mr. Hill: The A27 Worthing-Lancing Integrated Transport Study is to be funded as part of the Department's programme of Multi Modal Studies. Tenders will be issued shortly to invite consultants to the bid for the commission to undertake the Study.

Climate Change Programme

Mr. Efford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the Government's draft climate change programme. [113826]

Mr. Prescott: I will publish a draft climate change programme for the UK on Thursday 9 March. This will set out how we plan to deliver the UK's emission reduction target from Kyoto and move towards its domestic goal. I will also be publishing a consultation paper on a new Energy Efficiency Standard of Performance scheme which would start in 2002.

Copies of the report and the consultation paper will be available from the Vote Office and be placed in the Libraries of the House at 11.00 am tomorrow morning.

Housing Benefit

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what assessment he has made of the impact on the housing benefit budget of the judgment in the Court of Appeal in R v. Secretary of State ex parte Spath Holme Ltd. [113339]

Angela Eagle: I have been asked to reply.

The Court of Appeal judgment means that we can no longer factor in the capping arrangements in our forecast of rent allowance expenditure which relates to tenancies with a registered rent in England and Wales. As a result, our forecast will need to be increased by £8 million and £15 million for the years 2000–01 and 2001–02 respectively.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Debt Relief

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the impact of the Government's policy on debt reduction on her target of halving world poverty by 2015. [113495]

Mr. Foulkes: The Government have continually emphasised that the purpose of debt relief is to enable countries to make greater progress on reducing poverty and achieving the international development targets. Our submission to the review of the Heavily Indebted Poor Countries (HIPC) initiative set out ways in which the impact of debt relief on poverty reduction could be increased, and I welcome the improvements to the HIPC framework that have been agreed internationally and are now being implemented. The revised HIPC initiative both provides deeper and faster debt relief to qualifying countries, and ensures that a poverty reduction strategy is put in place so that all development resources, including those freed up by HIPC debt relief, can be invested effectively in anti-poverty programmes.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Balloting Services

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ensure that organisations offering balloting services to (a) trade unions and (b) political parties which involve contested elections count votes in the presence of the candidates should they wish this. [113031]

Mr. Alan Johnson: The Government have no plans to do so.

Trade union election ballots are regulated by the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992, which requires elections to be held for appointments to certain positions in trade unions and governs the conduct of those elections. In particular, the Act requires that votes should be fairly and accurately counted, an independent scrutineer should be appointed to monitor and report on the conduct of the election, and voting papers should be stored, distributed and counted by the scrutineer or another independent person. A union member or candidate who believes that there has been a breach of the Act's requirements can apply for a remedy to the Certification Officer or the court.

The procedure for the selection of candidates by political parties is a matter for the parties themselves.

Utilities Bill

Mrs. Browning: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to remove the provisions relating to (a) telecommunications and (b) water from the Utilities Bill; and if he will make a statement. [113324]

Mr. Gibb: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his plans for the regulation of telecoms and water. [113280]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 March 2000]: I announced during Oral Questions on 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 555, that the provisions relating to telecommunications and water will be removed from the Utilities Bill.

International Price Comparisons

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 50W, on international price comparisons, for what reason his Departmental Press Notice of 11 February stated that the survey report was to be published on 11 February. [113129]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The Department Press Notice did not say that the survey report was to be published on 11 February.

Petrol (Fair Competition)

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when the Director General of Fair Trading began the present review of the petrol undertakings given by oil companies in 1966; when the review will be completed; and if he will publish the results of the review. [113532]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 March 2000]: The Director General of Fair Trading began the present review of the 1966 petrol undertakings in July 1998. He expects to complete the review this month and will advise me on whether the undertakings should be retained, removed or amended. I will announce my decision in due course.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the impact of changes in the number of petrol supplier and petrol retailers in the downstream market from 1997 to date on competition. [113535]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Under UK competition legislation, the Director General of Fair Trading has responsibility for monitoring markets. He completed a major review of the petrol market in 1998. He concluded that competition in the petrol retailing market was strong and working to the benefit of consumers.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will ensure that voluntary agreements between petrol suppliers and petrol retailers not covered by the undertakings given by oil companies in 1966 are subject to equivalent scrutiny by the Office of Fair Trading to ensure fair competition. [113533]

Dr. Howells [holding answer 7 March 2000]: The Director General of Fair Trading has powers to investigate such agreements if they appear to raise competition concerns.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry who has the responsibility for ensuring adherence to the petrol undertakings given by oil companies in 1966. [113534]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 7 March 2000]: The Director General of Fair Trading is responsible for monitoring markets and compliance with orders and undertakings given under the competition legislation. He has in recent years considered a number of complaints about breaches of the 1966 petrol undertakings but has not so far found that breaches of the undertakings have occurred.

Latin American Trade Contracts

Mr. Loughton: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list those trade contracts with Latin American countries which have been cancelled in the last 16 months. [113595]

Mr. Caborn: I am unable to provide such a list. Companies do not generally advise my Department of contractual disputes which would be regarded as a commercial matter for them.

Telephone Call Costs

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment the OFT has made of the comparative cost of telephone calls from the UK to (a) India, Pakistan and Bangladesh and (b) the USA, Australia and New Zealand; and if he will make a statement. [113143]

Ms Hewitt: OFTEL has the main responsibility for telecoms competition issues. The market for international calls from the UK is competitive with more than 70 operators providing services. Prices for international calls have risen by only 7 per cent. in the last five years and BT's share of the market for international calls has fallen to below 37 per cent. for business users and below 70 per cent. for residential users.

There is still nevertheless a marked discrepancy in the cost of calling different countries.

BT's headline retail prices for the routes in question together with the accounting rates are:

Route	Retail price per minute [1]	Accounting rate
India	1.20	0.91
Pakistan	1.35	0.81
Bangladesh	1.35	1.13
(b)
USA	0.24	0.13
Australia	0.49	0.25
New Zealand	0.49	0.14

[1] Inclusive of VAT

The differences in the cost of calls between the two groups of country above arise because of the different stages of liberalisation in these countries and the different charges for terminating incoming international traffic (known as accounting rates). The telecoms markets of group (b) countries are completely liberalised compared to the closed markets of the group (a) countries which have big net inflows of traffic from the UK coupled with high accounting rates. Furthermore, there are much higher call volumes between group (b) countries and the UK compared to group (a).

The Government and OFTEL continue to participate in international meetings, particularly through the International Telecommunications Union (ITU) to put pressure on countries with high accounting rates to reduce them.

WALES

Teachers' Pay

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what talks he has had with (a) other departments and (b) the First Secretary concerning teachers' pay; and if he will make a statement. [108956]

Mr. Paul Murphy: I meet the First Secretary on a regular basis to discuss various issues including the importance of high standards of teaching in Wales. I have been involved in discussion with the National Assembly and the Department for Education and Employment on the implementation of the recommendations of the School Teachers Review Body in Wales.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112666]

Mr. Paul Murphy: No new public bodies have been established by either the Welsh Office between May 1997 and 30 June 1999, or the Wales Office from 1 July 1999 to date.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proportion of candidates for appointment to non-departmental public bodies since 1 May 1997 were not appointed due to their political affiliations. [113308]

Mr. Paul Murphy: Political affiliation is not taken into account when making appointments to non-departmental public bodies.

PRIME MINISTER

"Sharing the Nation's Prosperity"

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to update the report entitled "Sharing the Nation's Prosperity". [112253]

The Prime Minister: There have been two reports published under the general heading "Sharing the Nation's Prosperity". The first, "Variation in Economic & Social Conditions Across the UK", was completed in December 1999; the second, "Economic, Social and Environmental Conditions in the Countryside", was completed in February 2000. Both reports were prepared by the Cabinet Office and reflected relevant conditions and statistics at their time of publication. The Government will keep their findings in mind in developing and delivering future policies, but have no immediate plans to produce updates.

Leaks

Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Prime Minister what recent representations he has received regarding leak inquiries in Government departments. [112265]

The Prime Minister: None.

Operation Horseshoe

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Prime Minister, pursuant to his answer of 22 February 2000, Official Report, column 851W, on Operation Horseshoe, if he will place a copy of the statement made by the German Defence Minister on 9 April 1999 in the Library. [113365]

The Prime Minister: I have arranged to have placed in the Library a copy of the material concerning Operation Horseshoe made public by the German Defence Minister on 9 April, along with an English language translation.

CABINET OFFICE

IT (Public Services)

8. Mr. White: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent assessment she has made of how the use of information technology can improve the delivery of public services. [112263]

16. Mrs. McKenna: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what action is being taken to develop a strategic approach to the use of IT in delivering public services. [112272]

23. Mr. Sawford: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what action is being taken to develop a co-ordinated approach to the use of IT in delivering public services. [112280]

24. Kali Mountford: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps she is taking to develop a strategic approach to the use of IT in delivering public services. [112281]

25. Mrs. Gilroy: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what studies her Office is carrying out into the scope for improving the use of information technology in the delivery of Government services. [112282]

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to increase communications between Ministers and members of the public by means of the Internet. [112277]

Mr. Ian McCartney: We set out proposals for improving public service delivery by information technology in our draft Corporate IT Strategy, of which I announced the publication in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Bristol, West (Valerie Davey) on 14 February 2000, Official Report, column 353W.

Anti-drugs Strategy

9. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the latest developments in implementing the Government's anti-drugs strategy. [112264]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The Government are making good progress towards the tough targets set out in their strategy document, "Tackling Drugs to build a better Britain".

On 3 February, my right hon. Friend announced the joint funding of over £500,000 with the Department of Health and the Home Office to recruit up to 300 extra specialist treatment workers. This will help to ensure we have enough properly skilled staff to provide a high quality treatment service to those who need it.

We are also providing a further £7.5 million of support this year and in 2000–01 to assist all schools to deliver effective drug education.

15. Ms Dari Taylor: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what role the drug action teams are playing in the delivery of the Government's anti-drugs strategy. [112271]

Mr. Ian McCartney: Drug Action Teams have a crucial role in the delivery of the National Drugs Strategy. They consist of agencies for Probation, Health, Education, Police authorities and local authorities. They are the main mechanism for delivery on the ground. All Drug Action Teams are required to plan and deliver an effective programme of anti-drug activities in their area, which is in line with the National Strategy.

13. Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when she last met the Anti-drugs Co-ordinator to discuss future policy on the control of illegal substances entering the country. [112269]

Marjorie Mowlam: I met with the Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator at the Ministerial Steering Group for Drugs meeting on 23 February.

I hold regular meetings with the Anti-Drugs Co-ordinator to discuss all aspects of the Government's anti-drug strategy.

17. Mr. Coaker: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what assessment she has made of the Drug Awareness Resistance Education Programme; and if she will make a statement. [112273]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I am aware of the contribution made by the Drug Awareness Resistance Education Programme to drug education schemes in a number of areas. I know also that it has enjoyed strong support from a number of hon. Members, particularly in the Nottinghamshire area.

Social Exclusion

10. Mr. Hopkins: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement about the implementation of policies designed to tackle social exclusion. [112266]

19. Fiona Mactaggart: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement about the implementation of policies designed to tackle social exclusion. [112275]

21. Mrs. Ellman: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what steps she is taking to tackle social exclusion. [112278]

22. Mr. Salter: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement about the implementation of policies designed to tackle social exclusion. [112279]

Marjorie Mowlam: I can confirm that good progress is being made towards achieving the Government's targets on the four reports from the Social Exclusion Unit that have been published. These of course are on School Truancy and Exclusion, Rough Sleeping, Teenage Pregnancy and Bridging the Gap, and 16 to 18-year-olds not in Education, Training or Employment.

A draft report for consultation, on the National strategy for Neighbourhood Renewal, is due to be launched in early April.

Better Government (Older People)

11. Ms Ward: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to develop the Better Government for Older People projects. [112267]

Mr. Ian McCartney: The pilot phase of the Better Government for Older People programme comes to an end this month. We hope that, given the 28 pilots' great success in delivering better public services to older people, the local authorities leading them continue to support them and develop their work. The Government are looking forward to receiving the programme's final report in June and to putting its lessons into practice to deliver a marked and sustainable improvement in older people's experience of public services.

Regulation

12. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what plans she has to reduce the number of regulations issued by Government Departments. [112268]

Mr. Stringer: Each Government Department now has a Regulatory Reform Minister. These Ministers are directly responsible for delivering our regulatory strategy in their Department including:

getting rid of unnecessary regulations; and consulting with business on any essential new proposals.

My right hon. Friend the Minister for the Cabinet Office will chair a Regulatory Accountability Panel which will be examining the regulatory performance and programmes of each Department. Together with the requirement to produce regulatory impact assessments, these arrangements will ensure that this Government regulates only where necessary and in the least burdensome way.

"Modernising Government"

14. Mr. Quinn: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office what recent discussions she has had with (a) trade union representatives and (b) others on the "Modernising Government" programme. [112270]

Marjorie Mowlam: I have regular meetings with the trade unions at which developments in modernising government are discussed among other topics.

I have many other meetings and it would be unusual for modernisation not to feature positively in some way.

Online Government

20. Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office if she will make a statement on the state of preparedness of the United Kingdom for online Government. [112276]

Mr. Ian McCartney: I refer the hon. Gentleman to my reply to him on 20 January 2000, Official Report, column 544W.

DEFENCE

Defence Estates Organisation

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Estates organisation for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111725]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Estates agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Ian Andrews to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

The Secretary of State for Defence has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question on the targets set for the Defence Estate Organisation.

Detailed below are the Defence Estates (formerly the Defence Estate Organisation) published Key Targets for 1998/1999:

Target	Subject	Status
Key Target 1	Establish cost of disposals (including internal costs and consultancy fees, but not Works in Aid) as a percentage of disposal receipts and set targets for improvement	Achieved
Key Target 2	Achieve gross disposal receipts of £150m	Achieved
Key Target 3	Complete transfer of title to new owner of 90% of disposals within 3 years of property being passed to DEO for disposal.	Not Achieved
Key Target 4	Complete initial assessment against Business Excellence Model.	Achieved
Key Target 5	Complete Internal Investors in People (IIP) and external customer survey and submit reports to the Owner's Advisory Board, together with proposed targets for improvement:
	a. Internal IIP process	Achieved
	b. External customer survey	Achieved
Key Target 6	Appointments for external Project Managers for capital works projects:
	a. 99% achievement within 1 month for appointments made through Term Commissions or Partnering arrangements.	Achieved
	b. 90% achievement within 5 months for all appointments.	Achieved

It was not possible to achieve KT3 due to the legacy of sites in the disposal programme. The actual figure achieved for sites sold during 1998/1999, was 77 per cent.

The 1998/1999 Annual Report & Accounts for Defence Estates was published on 2 November 1999, and a copy placed in the library of the House of Commons on 2 November 1999.

The Agency's Key Targets for 1998/1999 reflected an organisation in transition. This was a period during which the Agency necessarily committed itself to essential internal restructuring to accommodate the recommendations of the Strategic Defence Review (SDR). It was also necessary for the Agency to improve its focus on the needs of its customers and other stakeholders. The 1999/2000 Key Targets reflected this. Specifically, they addressed the need to establish a corporate management strategy for the estate, the development of a new construction procurement model and to improve the process for the disposal of surplus buildings and land.

The published Key Targets for 1999/2000 are:

Key Target 1:

To demonstrate an improvement of 10% (over the figure for 1998/1999) in the level of customer satisfaction with the services provided by the Agency as measured by the 1999/2000 customer survey.

Key Target 2:

To achieve net disposal receipts of £235M.

Key Target 3:

To let three pilot Prime Contracts by 31 March 2000.

Key Target 4:

To publish a strategy for the management of the Defence Estate by 31 December 1999.

I hope this is helpful.

RAF Signals Engineering Establishment

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the RAF Signals Engineering Establishment for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111752]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Royal Air Force Signals Engineering Establishment. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from C. M. Davison to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence in which you ask for details of those targets for the RAF Signals Engineering Establishment for 1998–99 which were, and were not, achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case, and detailing the action taken by the Agency to improve target achievement in 1999–2000. These matters fall within my responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The Agency Key Targets and achievement against each one were published in the Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99 (Publication HC 677 Page 12 refers). Eight of the nine Targets were achieved. The Target not achieved—the attainment of Investors in People accreditation by 31 December 1998—was revised during the year following a mock assessment in September 1998 which highlighted the need for further work on the evaluation of training and development taking place within the organisation. The formal assessment was carried out in March 1999, and the Agency was awarded its accreditation in July 1999, well ahead of the overall MoD deadline.

In the light of revised guidance from the MoD Framework Team, only 4 Key Targets were published for the Agency in 1999–2000, and the evidence to date indicates that each Target will be achieved.

Defence Evaluation and Research Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111726]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question about the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency's (DERA) targets for 1998/99.

A list of the key targets for 1998/99 and details of which ones were and were not achieved, together with an explanation of the factors affecting the outcome in each case, is given in Annual Report for 1998/99, a copy of which is available in the House of Commons Library.

You also asked for details of the action taken by the Agency to improve target achievements performance in 1999/00. The targets for 1999/00 were published in Hansard on 27 July 1999. Again, a copy is attached for ease of reference. As you will see, with the exception of target 7, "To establish at least six Defence Diversification Offices across the UK", they are essentially the same as those for the previous year. The many trading problems caused by continuing declines in some of our core defence business have meant that the first half of 1999/2000 has been extremely challenging. We are, therefore, having to control costs carefully at the traditional technology end of our business in order to optimise our financial performance. Also of vital importance are our non-financial targets because these reflect the scientific achievements on which our reputation and hence future income stream will be based. Last year, we experienced difficulties in setting the baselines for one or two of these, but we have taken managerial steps to ensure that our true achievements are recorded this year. It is, nevertheless, too early to predict the outcome of these measures.

Overall, however, our ability to meet the targets will very much depend on a timely resolution of the debate over the future of DERA and the question of a public-private partnership announced in the Strategic Defence Review in July 1998. Naturally, such strategic uncertainty affects DERA staff and customers alike and, whilst our central direction remains unchanged, we need to establish a firm position from which to address the difficulties of our current trading environment.

Key Targets for 1999/2000

In Year Targets

consistent with Treasury requirements, to achieve at least a 6% Return on Capital Employed.

to set manpower chargeout rates for 2000/01 which reflect a reduction in DERA overheads compared with 1999/2000 budgeted levels.

to increase new business income (from customers other than the MOD) to £140 million in 1999/2000.

to increase the number of staff elected as Fellows of professional bodies by 10%.

to achieve on time 90% of the agreed milestones on work for MOD customers.

to increase the level of customer satisfaction, as measured by customer surveys.

to establish at least 6 Defence Diversification Offices across the UK.

Three Year Targets

over a period of 3 years, to achieve a 20% increase in peer reviewed publications per professional.

over a period of three years to increase by 50% the number of scientific teams assessed as 'world-class' in the technical assessment exercise.

Army Training and Recruiting Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Army Recruitment and Training Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111729]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Army Training and Recruiting Training Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from M. A. Piper to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your questions to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Key Targets for the Army Training and Recruiting Agency (ATRA) and the Defence Animal Centre (DAC) for the year 1998/1999, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Deputy Chief Executive of the Agency.

You should be aware that although the DAC was an Agency in its own right in 1998/1999, on 1 April 1999 it became part of the ATRA. For the year 1998/1999 therefore, there were two sets of Key Targets, one for each agency. For 1999/2000 and subsequent years, the DAC targets are subsumed within those of the ATRA and are not separately identified. Neither Agency has yet published their Annual Report and Accounts for 1998/1999, but expect to shortly.

ATRA Key Targets 1998/1999:

Key Target 1:

To meet the Adjutant General's requirement for commissioned officers.

Requirement: 642, Achievement: 591

The continuing shortfall was due to insufficient numbers of potential officers recruited in previous years. The demographic trough continues to have an effect. The Agency has introduced an Officers Marketing Action Plan which aims to improve the level of enquiries and firm applications for commissions.

Potential officers will be targeted in tertiary education as well as the traditional area of secondary education. The Agency has also introduced an improved "nurturing" process to maintain contact with potential officers throughout their education, prior to them joining.

Key Target 2:

To meet the Adjutant General's requirements for officers qualified for service in Field Force units following successful Special to Arm training.

Requirement: 632, Achievement: 580

The shortfall results from the insufficient numbers being recruited in previous years resulting in lower numbers passing through to Special to Arm training. The action being taken to address the shortfall in KT1 will also address this KT.

Key Target 3:

To meet the Adjutant General's requirement for professional development training of officers.

Requirement: 7,500, Achievement: 7,114

Achievement of this target is entirely dependent upon release of officers from the Field Army to undertake such training. Exceptional operational commitments prevented officers being released to take up all the places allocated. More tautly defined training programmes have been introduced which resulted in a considerable improvement in performance over 1997/98, and it is anticipated that this will continue.

Key Target 4:

To meet the Adjutant General's requirements for soldiers qualified for service in Field Force units following successful Special to Arm training.

Requirement: 10,140, Achievement: 8,353

Underachievement in recruiting and higher than anticipated wastage rates in Recruit Training (Phase 1) led to lower numbers entering Special to Arm training and therefore under performance in this KT. The Agency is putting in place mechanisms to improve both the quality of recruits entering the training pipeline and to make the training process more efficient. This is already showing signs of improving performance.

Key Target 5:

To meet the Adjutant General's requirement for soldiers' professional development training.

Requirement: 55,500, Achieved: 52,183

Again, exceptional operational commitments of the Field Army prevented soldiers being released to take up all the places allocated. More tautly defined training programmes have been introduced which resulted in a considerable improvement in performance over 1997/98, and it is anticipated that this will continue.

Key Target 6:

Achieve efficiency savings. During the year develop an Efficiency Index that measures output and associated costs as a baseline to achieve year on year improvements in efficiency.

Target: £34.7M savings, Achievement: £28M savings

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

The shortfall is due primarily to difficulties experienced with accounting for the pay of all Initial Trainees, for which the Agency assumed responsibility during the year. The development of the Efficiency Index has been achieved.

Overall, the Agency continued to operate in a difficult environment, the economy has been buoyant, thus increasing competitive pressure on recruiting in the target age group. The effects of the increased level of operational commitment in the Field Army continued to have an effect, principally by reducing the availability of officers and soldiers for career developments courses. The introduction of more tautly defined training programmes has resulted in an improvement in performance in the current year and this is set to continue.

DAC Targets met in 1998/1999:

Key Target 1:

To meet requirements for Military Personnel (MP) and Military Working Animals (MWA).

Target: 100%, Achievement: 100%

Key Target 2:

To meet agreed customer satisfaction for trained quality output.

Target: 95%, Achievement: 95%

Key Target 4:

To meet agreed customer satisfaction in timeliness of delivery.

Target: 95%, Achievement: 96.3%

Key Target 5:

To achieve training success rates for Course Specific MWA.

Target: 95%, Achievement: 100%

Key Target 6:

To achieve training success rates for MP.

Target: 90%, Achievement: 94.1%

DAC Target not met in 1998/1999:

Key Target 3:

To meet customer satisfaction in numbers of trained output quantity.

Target: MWA—95%, MP—100%, Achievement: MWA—78.9%, MP—100%

The shortfall in Military Working Animals was caused primarily by a shortage of suitable dogs being available and was compounded by staff shortages. This latter was caused by recruiting deficits in the past and although there have been improvements in this area, operational commitments by the Field Army are still causing problems. A number of initiatives have been introduced to overcome the shortfall in dogs, principally revised procurement procedures and veterinary screening procedures.

Service Children's Education Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Service Children's Education agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111738]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Service Children's Education agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from David Wadsworth to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

Key Targets

The Key Targets for 1998/99 for the Service Children's Education Agency, and our performance against them, are set out in our Annual Report and Accounts 1998/1999 (HC167), a copy of which was placed in the library of the House of Commons.

In broad terms the performance of the Agency was judged in 98/99 against nine Key Targets; five directly related to education; the remainder covering efficiency, customer satisfaction and response times to enquiries. A final milestone target related to the introduction of an SCE nursery education scheme.

The performance of the Agency against these targets is set out at Annexes A and B, attached.

As you will see from those figures, I am pleased to report that, in the main, we met the overwhelming majority of our targets. Those that we did not meet are as follows:

Key Target 4—The SATs targets at Key Stages 12, 2 and 3 (ages 7, 11 and 14)

Although 11 of the 18 individual aspects to this target were achieved, 7 were not. These were:

English—Key Stage 1 Test/Task, and Key Stage 3 Teacher Assessment

Maths—Key Stage 1 Teacher Assessment and Key Stage 2 Test/Task

Science—Key Stages 1 and 3 Teacher Assessment and Key Stage 3 Test/Task

No specific reasons for failing to achieve these targets has yet been adduced. It should be noted that in all assessments at KS1, KS2 and KS3 our achievement scores were higher than English LEAs, sometimes significantly so (on average by +5.8%).

Key Target 7—The Efficiency Target (reduction in per capita pupil costs, measured on an accruals basis)

An unexpected drop in pupil numbers combined with increased financial investment in education, for example extra funding for the Literacy and Numeracy strategies, meant that this target was not met in 1998/99. The use of such a blunt measure of efficiency has now been judged to be unrealistic, given the continuing investment in education spending and teaching salaries. It has therefore been proposed that, for 1999/2000 and beyond, the Agency should develop a means to measure the "value added" by SCE. This will require further developments in baseline assessments and in pupil through-life tracking via Unique Pupil Numbers (UPNs).

With regard to the future, our Key Targets for 99/00 have been modified to achieve an improvement each year on the Agency's performance on the previous year. This should reflect a more realistic but nevertheless challenging target in these subjects. My aspiration to improve our performance in 1999/2000 is being addressed by involving schools more closely in the target setting process, a continued commitment to the literacy and numeracy strategies through intensive in service training for teachers, and the greater involvement of the external advisers to Agency's Owner's, namely DfEE, HMI/Ofsted and the Chief Education Officer of Hampshire Local Education Authority to ensure that the targets are realistic.

I hope that this is helpful.

Meteorological Office

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Meteorological Office for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111750]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Meteorological Office. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Ewins to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Met. Office's performance against its key performance targets in 1998–99. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of The Met. Office.

Our targets in 1998–99, as announced in Hansard on 24 April 1998 (Col 714), were as follows:

Key Target 1

To achieve a value of at least 111.1 index points on 31 March 1999 from a baseline of 100.0 on 31 March 1995, for the global Numerical Weather Prediction (NWP) index, which measures the overall forecasting skill of the global NWP model;

Key Target 2

To achieve an index level of 104.0 by 31 March 2000 from a baseline of 400.0 at 31 March 1996, and to achieve an increase of at least 2.0 index points during 1998–99 for the UK NWP partial index, which measures the forecasting skill of the NWP model for the UK;

Key Target 3

To increase the index of service quality to at least 104.8 on 31 March 1999 from a baseline of 100.0 for 1996–97, in line with agreed customer requirements. The index covers representative services and products across defence civil aviation, public and business users;

Key Target 4

To improve efficiency from a baseline of 100.0 on 31 March 1997 to at least 108.0 on 31 March 1999 as measured by the agreed Efficiency Index;

Key Target 5

To achieve an overall return on capital employed (ROCE) of at least 7% taken year on year. For the financial years 1997–98 and 1998–99 to achieve an overall ROCE of at least 11.6% averaged over the two years;

Key Target 6

To make a contribution from commercial activities in 1998–99 of not less than £1.1 million, on the agreed basis of measurement.

Our performance against these targets was published in our Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99, copies of which are available in the library of the House, and is summarised in the following table:

Key performance indicator	Target	Outturn	Achieved
UK NWP Index	[1]104.2	106.3	Yes
Global NWP Index	111.1	109.9	No
Service Quality Index	104.8	114.5	Yes
Efficiency Index	108.0	111.5	Yes
ROCE[2]	7%	[3]10%	Yes
Commercial Contribution	£1.1m	£1.8m	Yes

[1] The Index score at the end of 1997–98 was 102.2.

[2] The basis of calculating ROCE changed during 1998–99 as a result of the introduction of FRS12, a financial reporting standard that affected the accounting treatment of provisions. ROCE performance in the table is shown pre-FRS12, being the basis upon which the 1998–99 target was set. The post FRS12 outturn was 6.3%.

[3] The average ROCE for 1997–97 and 1998–99 was 13.8% pre-FRS12 (13.5% post-FRS12).

As you will see, we exceeded our financial performance targets by a significant margin and substantially improved our service quality and efficiency. We also improved our UK Numerical Weather Prediction (NWP) Index, which is a measure of our underlying forecasting accuracy for the UK, by a significant margin. However, we fell just short of the Global NWP target. Problems with the model's handling of the South Pole region were identified and rectified, and benefits of a higher resolution model introduced in January 1998 began to feed through towards the end of 1998–99. As a result, the target score was achieved less than 2 months into 1999–2000. Moreover, comparison with the performance for global models run by other Meteorological services shows that, despite the failure to achieve our own challenging performance target, we have maintained our position as a world-class weather forecasting centre.

To improve Global NWP performance in 1999–2000, a number of further enhancements to the model have been introduced, and I am pleased to say that we are currently on course to meet both of our NWP targets this year. We are also on track to deliver greater in-year cost efficiency, part of which has been anticipated in agreed prices for 1999/2000 with the remainder to be passed on to our customers through further price reductions in future years. We have cut the planned level of ROCE substantially, in line with our strategy of investment for growth, which will enable us, inter-alia, to improve service quality (especially forecasting accuracy and responsiveness to customer needs) and, largely through increased automation, generate further down-stream efficiency improvements. We are, however, unlikely to meet our target for commercial contribution, although our commercial business remains profitable. We have already introduced changes to our commercial division, including the appointment of a new Managing Director, which we are confidence will increase both revenue and profitability in 2000–01.

Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111742]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Joint Air Reconnaissance Intelligence Centre. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Steve Lloyd to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about our Agency's Key Targets and whether or not they were achieved for 1998–99. All targets were met in full.

Details of the achievements are listed below and contained in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts for 1998–99, copies of which have been placed in the Libraries of the Houses of Parliament.

Percentage

Key target		Target	Achievement
1	To provide operational imagery intelligence (IMINT) support as follows:
	Priority 1 tasks to be completed within 24 hours of receipt of appropriate imagery	98	100
	Priority 2 tasks within 48 hours	92	100
	Priority 3 tasks within 7 days	88	91
2	To provide detached Service personnel as required, up to a total of 22 at any one time		Achieved
3	To complete Strategic, non-operational intelligence requirements and other tasks:
	Priority 1 tasks to be completed within 24 hours of receipt of appropriate imagery	92	95
	Priority 2 tasks within 48 hours	88	95
	Priority 3 tasks within 7 days	80	83
	Priority 4 tasks within 6 weeks	75	89
4	To revise the methodology of measuring the degree of customer satisfaction with the service provided		Achieved
5	To achieve an improvement of efficiency	2.5	3.2
6	To conduct evaluations of imagery reconnaissance systems for Government departments within agreed times and allocated resources		Achieved

Action taken by the Agency to continue to achieve its targets and where possible improve performance include:

a. The continuing refinement of the Re-organisation of all areas of the Agency, to give a better focus on satisfying tasking needs.

b. A methodology for measuring customer satisfaction prototyped during FY 99/00.

c. The continued pursuit of a clear methodology of true output measurement.

I hope that you will find that this answer gives you the information that you are seeking.

Army Technical Support Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Army Technical Support Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111747]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Army Technical Support Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from A. D. Ball to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the Key Target achievement for 1998–99 for the Army Technical Support Agency (ATSA), as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the ATSA.

As reported in the ATSA Annual Report and Accounts 1998/99, copies of which were laid in the Library of the House on 26 July 1999, ATSA did not achieve one part of one of its 7 Key Targets set for 1998–99. The Key Targets, their achievement, the factors affecting their outcome and the action taken to improve performance for 1999–2000 are detailed at Annex A for your convenience of consideration.

The partial failure to achieve on of the Key Targets is also explained in detail as follows:

Key Target 4 Part 2: Despatch 90% of routine technical publications within 24 working days of receipt of the demand.

Although ATSA's cumulative annual achievement for 1998–99 was 85.3% of nearly 70,000 demands, the 90% target was exceeded in 6 of the 12 monthly reporting periods. This was despite an 11% increase in annual cumulative demand due to the operation and roulement of units in the Balkans and further complicated by unforeseen complete reissues of the extensive Challenger 2 Main Battle Tank support publications.

Performance against the Key Targets for 1999–2000 is monitored by the Chief Executive and Executive Management Board of the Agency on a monthly basis. This performance is reported quarterly to the Agency's Owner and annually to Ministers through publication of the Next Steps Report and the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts. Key Target achievement is also considered by the National Audit Office during the annual submission of the Accounts for external audit.

As at 31 January 2000, the Agency is on target to achieve all of its Key Targets for 1999–2000.

I hope that you find this information helpful.

ATSA Key Targets 1998–99

Definitions, performance and proposed changes for 1999–2000

Key Target 1: To influence equipment design by obtaining formal tasking from Project Managers/Integrated Logistic Support (ILS) Managers in 80% of appropriate ILS projects.

Result: Achieved: 104 (80%) of 130 appropriate ILS projects receiving tasking.

Improvement: There is no change to the 80% target for 1999–2000. This list of appropriate projects is reviewed and updated by the Customer every 6 months and thus offers fresh challenge each time this occurs.

Key Target 2: To recommend at least 10% gross cost saving in Advanced Order Spares purchasing for appropriate non-ILS projects without reducing the equipment sustainability or availability.

Result: Exceeded: A saving of £3.763M (63%) was recommended against spares listings valued at £5.96M.

Improvement: Discontinued as a Key Target for 1999–2000 since the proportion of cost savings are determined more by manufacturers' recommendations than factors within ATSA's control. As ILS and off-the-shelf procurement become the normal approach and replace Advanced Order Spares procurement, this area will become progressively less important. Although no longer a Key Target, this process of scrutiny and review is still being conducted.

Key Target 3: To provide a complete and accurate answer to 92% of ad hoc enquiries within 2 working days.

Result: Exceeded: 66,818 (96.8%) of 69,030 ad hoc queries received were answered within the period.

Improvement: The target is increased from 92% to 94% whilst also noting a typical 8% increase in annual demand.

Key Target 4: To despatch new and reprinted technical publications within the period from receipt of demand as follows:

For priority demands, 90% within 5 working days

For routine demands, 90% within 24 working days

Result: Part Exceeded and Part Not Achieved: 1,386 (99.4%) of the 1,395 priority demands, and 59,542 (85.3%) of 69,542 routine demands were met within the target periods.

Improvement: The target levels are being maintained in 1999–2000 in recognition of the steady increase in annual cumulative demand over recent years. Resource levels are unchanged. Increased efficiency is continually sought by adjusting batch-processing techniques.

Key Target 5: To complete at least: 90% of Operational projects and 75% of Priority A projects before the agreed target date.

Result: Exceeded: 5 (100%) Operational projects and 91 (89.2%) of 102 Priority A projects were completed by the agreed target date.

Improvement: The target coverage is being extended by the inclusion of an additional target of 60% of Priority B projects; the other targets remain the same. This will increase the measured target scope to 80% of all projects received.

Key Target 6: To satisfy 90% of customers in the handling of technical projects.

Results: Exceeded: 1,331 (98.1%) of 1,357 completed projects received a grading of satisfied (or better) by the customer on closure questionnaires.

Improvement: Target increased to 92% for 1999–2000. In addition, results are validated through sample customer interviews.

Key Target 7: To provide a considered response to 90% of Equipment Failure Reports (or equivalent) submissions within 10 working days of receipt.

Result: Exceeded: 22,684 (91.9%) of 24,684 EFRs received considered responses within the stated period.

Improvement: To be discontinued as a Key Target for 1999–2000. The EFR system is currently under review and major changes are expected. In the meantime the main customer (HQ LAND) has agreed to the introduction of a new, more cost-effective system of consolidated bulletins rather than individual responses.

Defence Transports and Movements Executive

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Transports and Movements Executive for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111756]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Transport and Movements Executive. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from P. T. W. Leaning to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence, about the targets for the Defence Transport and Movements Executive, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility, being the Chief Executive of the Agency which replaced the former DTMX in April 1999.

It is pleasing to report that DTMX achieved all its Key Targets for 1998–99 and the results of that financial year's performance were included in the Annual Report and Accounts which were laid before Parliament on 27 January this year (Library number 132, pages 10–14). For your ease of reference, I am providing extract details of each of the four Key Targets concerned, at Annex A.

Also included in the DTMX Annual Report and Accounts (page 27) is the background behind the launch of our new Agency, into which DTMX was subsumed. Basically, as part of the Strategic Defence Review it was decided to form one Agency which would be responsible for the provision of surface (road, rail and sea) and air transport and movements support to the Ministry of Defence. The Defence Transport and Movements Agency was, therefore, formed from an amalgamation of DTMX, the Joint Transport and Movements Staff (Northwood) and elements of 38 Gp RAF/Air Movements Executive (London, High Wycombe and Halton).

DTMA has been able to use the lessons learnt by its former constituent parts but the way that it operates, and the type of support that it provides, is different to that of its predecessors. With that in mind, it has been set new challenging targets, rather than continue with any of the targets set for its predecessors. Again, I am providing details of the four Key Targets for 1999–2000, at Annex B.

DTMX Key Targets for 1998–99

Key Target 1

To exceed 90% of Customers' perceived satisfaction of requirements.

Results: In conjunction with the Defence Analytical Services Agency (DASA), the DTMX Plans Team developed a survey to both map the customer base and subsequently monitor satisfaction levels. The analysis of the survey results has proved useful and encouraging. Of the 371 surveys sent out, 60% were returned. The overall satisfaction rating was 92%. Desk officers have followed up these results with customers and in particular investigated those where DTMX scored less than the prescribed 90%.

Key Target 2

To establish the baseline for the quality of the Unaccompanied Baggage (UB) Service, to enable subsequent measurement of improvements.

Results: Although DTMX had been given until May 1999 to establish a performance baseline, it was decided that with the incorporation of DTMX into DTMA, a set of results would be compiled for the period January-March 1999 for each of the UB business areas, based on the existing, DTMX compiled, survey data.

Outside of DTMX a number of different surveys were already in use by the Divisional and District Headquarters. To avoid 'survey fatigue' it was agreed that DTMX would sponsor a single set of common surveys covering the whole gambit of the Unaccompanied Baggage Service. These surveys were taken into general use at the end of 1998 and will, in the future, provide a much wider data set, allowing the Agency to monitor customer perceptions continuously and thereby improve the service.

Key Target 3

To exceed 90% satisfaction of Customers' requirements.

Results: Given that the majority of the service provided is carried out through agents and contractors, it was acknowledged that a system of negative reporting would allow us to concentrate on supplier failure and would best support customer requirements. High volume activities with few complaints have raised the percentage satisfaction rate, but there are areas that have been highlighted which require attention. Overall 210 complaints were recorded during the period and these are summarised as follows:

The performance of our suppliers to customers' satisfaction exceeded 99%.

Customers with complaints or problems are required to contact DTMX with the details, these are then confirmed in writing, investigated and if upheld recorded as a supplier failure against the target. In order to improve the capture of complaints data, action is in hand to incorporate a system of complaints logging on CARGONET, the Agency's primary data warehouse and UBMIS which is specifically tailored towards the Unaccompanied Baggage Service.

Key Target 4

To establish unit costs per output data to enable the setting of realistic efficiency targets for subsequent years.

Results: Through the development of the Agency's Activity Based Costing model, it has been possible to identify unit costs down to individual loads. For example it is now possible to identify the average cost of sending 1 tonne of aggregate to the Falkland Islands or of delivering a consignment of ammunition to one of the Ammunition Depots.

Many of the outputs produced or sponsored by the Agency are conducted under call-off contracts which are casted on a schedule of prices.

DTMA Key Targets for 1999–2000

Key Target 1

To meet the customers' requirements as specified in customer supplier agreements to deliver:

a. 90% or more of agency transactions within agreed criteria.

b. 90% or more of the services provided under call-off contracts at a satisfactory level.

This KT measures the quantity, quality and timeliness of the 36 services of the Agency as specified by its customers through the performance indicators contained in the Customer Supplier Agreements (CSAs). The CSAs have been developed with customers and will ultimately provide the basis for Agency funding. The services provided by DTMA fall into 2 categories: those processed directly by Agency staff and those that are provided as contracted capability against which a user is able to call-off.

Key Target 2

To establish baseline data for the administrative unit costs by 31 December 1999.

The administrative unit cost is defined as the cost of completing an Agency processed transaction. These costs will be obtained through the use of an Activity Based Costing model, which will need to be developed in year one with a target date of 31 December 1999 set to obtain baseline data. Efficiencies will be measured from this baseline in future years.

Key Target 3

To demonstrate net added value.

One of the benefits that DTMA ought to be able to offer its customers is the contract price advantage achieved through its corporate negotiating power and skills. This KT aims to demonstrate that the DTMA operating costs incurred by the provision of contracted services are more than covered by this price advantage and hence add value to the Department as a whole. This will be achieved by comparison with specific indices provided by the Office for National Statistics.

Key Target 4

To achieve at least a satisfactory rating in the provision of operational transport and movements support.

This KT relates to the output in support of planning the deployment, sustainment and recovery of forces on operations that may not be subject to a CSA. It also includes the MOD tasking authority for those assets owned by HQ 38 Group and Commodore Royal Fleet Auxiliary (COMRFA). This activity is a core Agency task supporting military operations and force projection. PJHQ as the principal operational Customer, will be requested to provide a biennial assessment of the Agency's operational performance based on post exercise and audit reports on Defence operational capability.

Military Survey

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Military Survey for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111764]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Military Survey Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from P. R. Wildman to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about Key Target achievement for 1998–99 for the Military Survey Defence Agency, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Agency Chief Executive.

As reported in the Agency's Annual Report and Account, Military Survey achieved five of the six Key Targets set by its owner for 1998–99. The sixth was achieved one month behind schedule. This delay was due to the need to complete higher priority work in support of operations. Full details of the Key Targets are attached at Annex A.

The Agency monitors the performance of its Key Targets and detailed Business Plan Objectives via an electronic reporting spreadsheet, which is supplied to the Directors' Board each month. The Directors' Board Pack is supplemented with a printout containing details of all those objectives which contribute to overall performance together with commentary from the managers responsible. The introduction of these procedures has ensured that appropriate action is taken in a timely manner.

I hope that you find this information helpful.

Those targets of the Military Survey for 1998–99 which were achieved

Key Target 1:

To satisfy 100% of requirements for geographic support to current operations within the timescale agreed between the Agency and its customers.

Outcome: Achieved

Key Target 3:

To complete the agreed Annual Production Programme (APP) on the time and to cost.

Outcome: Achieved

Key Target 4:

To establish by March 1999 a process for measuring the degree of satisfaction the library service provides.

Outcome: Achieved

Key Target 5:

To maintain the required readiness state of the required Field Support elements of the Agency as required by the Department.

Outcome: Achieved

Key Target 6:

To achieve a 2.5% improvement in efficiency.

Outcome: Achieved

Those targets of the military survey for 1998–99 which were not achieved

Key Target 2:

To agree with the Joint Customer Group by March 1999, a process for measuring the degree of customer satisfaction with the service provided.

Outcome: Achieved at the end of April 1999

Factors affecting the outcome: Publication of the paper defining the process for measuring customer satisfaction was delayed due to the need to complete higher priority work in support of operations. The paper was agreed at the end of April 1999—a delay of one month.

Defence Bills Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Bills Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111730]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Bills Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from I. S. Elrick to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning performance against the targets set for the Defence Bills Agency, as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Agency.

The seven targets set for the Defence Bills Agency for 1998/99 are detailed below and performance was set out in the Agency's 1998/99 Annual Report and Accounts, a copy of which was placed in the library of the House on 13 July 1999. The first six were achieved in full but the seventh only attained 95.7% against a target of 100%.

1. To pay 97% of correctly presented bills within 11 working days;
2. To pay 100% of correctly presented bills within 30 calendar days;
3. To raise 100% of invoices within 5 working days;
4. To deliver services within the agreed price of £15.587 million for the financial year;
5. To increase the average number of bills processed annually by each member of staff to 6,555;
6. To ensure CAPITAL compliance by 1 January 1999.
7. To meet the criteria contracted for in the Service Level Agreement.

Performance against this final target was affected by the need, in order to meet higher priorities, to divert Agency resources from the fifteen lower-level performance indicators which are aggregated into a single target. The most significant of these higher priorities was the need to alter the Agency's business processes to accommodate the Statutory Interest on Commercial Debt (Interest) Act in November 1998. The Agency also diverted resources to assist the Department in its development of resource accounting and to undertake preparatory work on the Agency's extensive computer resources to ensure millennium compliance. In addition the Agency assimilated a 6% increase in bill throughput numbers compared to the previous financial year, processing some 3.7 million bills in total.

To improve performance in 1999/2000 the Agency's targets were redefined following a triennial Prior Options review. This moved the main emphasis of the Agency's targets to the improvement of unit costs which could be independently benchmarked against commercial comparators. There was also a significant tightening of the targets in other areas.

The Agency has responded to these changed circumstances by preparing a Corporate Plan which is designed to achieve these new and demanding challenges. The main thrusts of the Plan are:

(i) greater commitment to E-commerce in both internal and external communications;

(ii) the more effective utilisation of Information Technology in business processes; and

(iii) the use of European Quality Foundation Excellence Model benchmarking techniques to ensure that best practice is used throughout the Agency.

The deliberately challenging new targets are not being met fully in this first year of the new Service Level Agreement. However, significant progress towards meeting the overarching outcomes contained in the Service Level Agreement has been achieved during 1999–2000 and measures have been taken to ensure that performance will be improved further during 2000–2001. Whilst some of the key targets are not being met in the current year, bill payments performance is still the highest to date in real terms and puts the Agency in the top 10% of large commercial and public sector enterprises in Europe, as measured in independent benchmarking exercises.

Army Personnel Centre

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Army Personnel Centre for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111746]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Army Personnel Centre. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from G. A. M. Hammond to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 6 March 2000:

I am replying on behalf of the Chief Executive of the Army Personnel Centre (APC), in his absence on business, to your Question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the performance targets for the APC for the year 1998/99, as this matter falls within the responsibility of this agency.

I should explain that a copy of the APC Annual Report and Accounts 1998/99, published in July 1999, was placed in the library of the House of Commons. Annex A to the report provides details of APC performance against Key Ministerial Targets. The APC met its Key Targets for 1998/99 with the exception of Key Target 3 (KT3) - Notice of Posting, which is expressed as the percentage of personnel posted by the APC who were given at least six months' notice of their individual move. The achievement against this target averaged 25% suggesting that the target was unrealistic in the changed conditions since the target was set. With the continuing level of operational commitments and Strategic Defence Review (SDR) implementation which started in early 1999, this target has been reviewed in the light of this experience, and subject to Ministerial approval, may be adjusted in the APC Business Plan for 2000–01.

I hope that this helps to explain the position.

Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111762]

Dr. Moonie: The Naval Aircraft Repair Organisation was disestablished on 31 March 1999.

Defence Animal Centre

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Animal Centre for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111734]

Dr. Moonie: The Defence Animal Centre (DAC) ceased to be a defence agency on 30 March 1999. The DAC was absorbed into the Army Training and Recruiting Agency on 1 April 1999.

General Security Agreement

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place a copy of the 1961 General Security Agreement in the Library. [111485]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 22 February 2000]: The 1961 General Security Agreement between the UK Government and the US Government is currently a classified document. Before the document can be released into the public domain both signatories must agree to its declassification. We are therefore discussing the possibility of declassification with the US authorities. I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of my letter will be placed in the Library of the House when these discussions are complete.

Porton Down

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what age restrictions exist for the military personnel who take part in the service volunteer programme at the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down; [112370]

(2) on what date the Porton Down volunteers helpline was opened; and how many individuals have contacted it since it was opened; [112374]

(3) what recent studies have been carried out by the chemical defence establishment at Porton Down to establish whether short-term exposure to (a) the chemical agent BZ and (b) the glycollate MPIPG can cause long-term illnesses; [112372]

(4) how many times since 1 March 1998 the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down has supplied information about former volunteers to the War Pension Agency when those volunteers have submitted a claim to the Agency; [112376]

(5) what is his Department's estimate of the percutaneous lethal dose of liquid sarin (GB) nerve agent for an averagely-built person; [112367]

(6) how many former service volunteers have visited the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down to inspect records of their experiments and discuss their tests with members of staff since 1 January 1998; [112375]

(7) how many military personnel took part in the service volunteer programme at the chemical defence establishment at Porton Down during 1999; [112373]

(8) what work has been carried out by the chemical and biological defence establishment at Porton Down to develop a test to identify the relative sensitivity of different individuals to the effects of nerve agents. [112377]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir John Chisholm for Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 8 March 2000:

I am replying to your parliamentary questions about the service volunteer programme at Porton Down since the laboratories at this site are now operated by the Chemical and Biological Defence Sector (CBD) of the Defence Evaluation and Research Agency (DERA).

The Porton Down volunteers helpline was opened in February 1998. Since then, some 250 former volunteers and/or their representatives have contacted the line. Ten volunteers have visited Porton Down since 1 January 1998 to view and discuss records with members of the staff. CBD has also supplied information about former volunteers to the War Pensions Agency when those volunteers have submitted a claim to the Agency on 28 occasions since 1 March 1998.

During 1999, there were 71 military volunteer attendances at CBD Porton Down and 13 at HMS Phoenix, the Naval Nuclear and Biological Centre and fire training school for a study programme carried out under the auspices of the volunteer programme. The age of participants depends on the requirements of the individual study but is generally in the range from 18 to 45 years.

CBD has not undertaken any work to develop a test to identify the relative sensitivity of different individuals to the effects of nerve agents. No work involving exposure to either the chemical agent BZ or the glycollate MPIPG has been undertaken since the 1970s. None of the pre 1970s work was to establish if short-term exposure resulted in long-term illness.

I am withholding details of the Ministry of Defence estimates on the toxic doses of nerve agents including sarin (GB) under exemption 1 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information because their disclosure would cause harm to defence. As required under the Code, due account was taken in reaching this decision of the nature of the information and the possible public interest in disclosure.

I hope this is helpful.

Test Pilots

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to transfer test pilots from DERA's Aircraft Test and Evaluation Sector at Boscombe Down to RAF Strike Command; and if he will make a statement. [112450]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 1 March 2000]: The test pilots who support the work of DERA's Aircraft Test and Evaluation Sector at Boscombe Down are currently administered and line managed by RAF Personnel and Training Command. From 1 April 2000, this responsibility will be transferred to RAF Strike Command. This recognises that most of the test pilot output of the Aircraft Test and Evaluation Sector is in support of RAF Strike Command.

Floods (Mozambique)

Ann Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assistance his Department is giving to aid the flood victims in Mozambique; and at what cost. [113342]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence is providing four RAF Puma helicopters with around 100 support personnel, and the Royal Fleet Auxiliary FORT GEORGE with five RN Sea King helicopters to assist in the flood relief efforts in Mozambique.

The overall no loss costs (which exclude salaries and other sunk costs) are yet to be finalised. Assuming a two-week deployment, we expect the additional costs for the Pumas to be up to £1.8 million, and up to £1.4 million for FORT GEORGE. Exceptionally, £615,000 of the costs of the Pumas will be offset by the MOD against the costs of the exercise in Norway from which the helicopters have been withdrawn. The remainder will be borne by the Department for International Development.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military helicopters have been sent to Mozambique and South Africa to provide humanitarian aid for flood victims. [113300]

Mr. Spellar: The UK has sent a total of nine military helicopters to provide assistance to the international relief efforts in Mozambique. This comprises four RAF Pumas and five RN Sea King helicopters on board Royal Fleet Auxiliary FORT GEORGE. The Puma aircraft travelled via South Africa en route to Mozambique.

Defence Medical Training Organisation

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Medical Training Organisation for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111753]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Medical Training Organisation. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Brigadier J. R. Brown to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 8 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about our targets for 1998–99 as this matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief Executive of the Defence Medical Training Organisation.

Our targets for 1998–99 are shown in the following table along with the outturn and achievement for that year. As you will see we achieved or exceeded all but three of our targets. We failed to meet our target to apply a Systems Approach to Training to a minimum of 33% of appropriate courses. This was because we had three vacant posts in the Division responsible for this work during this period. These posts have now been filled and we are on track to achieve our target in this area for 1999/2000. We also narrowly missed our target to deliver 95% of Common Core Course trainees on time as we only achieved 94.3%. Also our target to ensure that availability meets the requirement as defined in the Annual Agreed Training Requirement where we aimed for 100% but only achieved 99.7%.

Defence Vetting Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Defence Vetting Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111743]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Vetting Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Michael Wilson to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 8 March 2000:

I have been asked by the Secretary of State, in view of my responsibilities as Chief Executive of the Defence Vetting Agency, to provide a detailed response to your Named Day Written Question 111743.

The DVA was set 6 Key Targets in 1998–1999, relating to quality, timeliness and efficiency. The performance of the Agency against these is reflected in the Annual Report and Accounts, which is available in the library of the House of Commons. The complete list of Key Targets and their achievement is shown below.

1. To maintain quality standards to a 95% level through compliance with agreed procedures, and to develop quality improvement targets in the light of a Defence-wide customer survey. Achieved.

2. To complete 85% of Security Checks (SC) within 6 weeks. Achieved.

3. To complete 71% of Counter Terrorist Checks (CTC) within 6 weeks. Achieved.

4. To complete 85% of Developed Vetting (DV) checks within 6 months. Achieved.

5. To reduce the 1997/1998 average times for SC, CTC and DV by 5%. SC and CTC achieved. DV not achieved - failed by 6%.

a. As explained in the Annual Report, this was a new target in 1998/1999, and each of the individual performance indicators was to be reviewed in the light of performance achieved. Thus, there was known to be some uncertainty surrounding these targets from the outset.

b. Each DV case involves at least one face-to-face interview with the vetting subject, and a number of further interviews with their referees. The number of referees interviewed varies from case to case depending on information available. And the time it takes to arrange and complete all the interviews on any particular case is very variable. For reasons that are not altogether clear, it proved more difficult in 1998/1999 than in 1997/1998 to line up Service personnel in the Army and in the RAF for interview. High turbulence may be a factor.

c. Failure against the target has not caused undue difficulty for the Services. The same target has been set for 1999/2000, and looks like being met.

6. To maintain the 1997/1998 Unit Cost of Output. Achieved.

In 1999–2000 the agency will be preparing to collocate at York from its existing locations in central London, Portsmouth, Woolwich and Corsham. In view of this, no improvement in performance has been anticipated during the period.

I hope this explains the position. Please let me know if you require further information.

MOD Police

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the MoD Police for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111763]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Constable of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency. I have asked the Chief Constable to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from W. E. E. Boreham to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 8 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about targets for 1998–99 as this matter falls into my area of responsibility as Chief Constable/Chief Executive of the Ministry of Defence Police Agency.

The Ministry of Defence Police Agency were set the following Key Targets for 1998–99:

By 31 March 1999 to have completed all remaining Service Level Agreements with the Agency customers.

By 31 March 1999 to have established an MDP Office Watch initiative at a minimum of 20 MoD locations nation-wide.

In financial year 1998–99 to have in place Local Policing and Security Plans at each MDP policed Establishment.

By 31 March 1999, in accordance with Her Majesty's Inspector of Constabulary's recommendations, to have put in place agreed Area Policing Team (APT) performance indicators which will enable the Agency to set targets for APT performance improvement in financial year 1999–00.

To achieve, across Chief Constable MDP's retained element of the MDP budget, an overall efficiency saving of 2.5 per cent.

To contribute to the achievement of Departmentally Mandated Standards for project CAPITAL (introduction of Resource Accounting and Budgeting).

All of these Key Targets were achieved in full, as reported in my Annual Report for 1998–99, copies of which are available in the Library of the House. Further demanding targets were put in place for 1999–00, and performance against them is monitored on a regular basis.

Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency

Mr. Menzies Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) those targets of the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency for 1998–99 which (i) were and (ii) were not achieved, giving the factors affecting the outcome in each case and (b) action taken by the agency to improve target achievement performance in 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111728]

Dr. Moonie [holding answer 6 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Storage and Distribution Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the right hon. and learned Member.

Letter from Brigadier P. D. Foxton to Mr. Menzies Campbell, dated 8 March 2000:

I refer to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence concerning performance against targets set for the Army Base Storage and Distribution Agency (ABSDA) in 1998/99 and what action has been taken to improve performance in 1999–2000. As Chief Executive of the Defence Storage and Distribution Agency (DSDA), the successor organisation to ABSDA, I am replying as this subject falls within my area of responsibility.

As reported in the Agency's Annual Report and Accounts, which were placed in the House of Commons Library on 26 January 2000, ABSDA performance against its Key Targets for 1998/99 was:

a. Key Target 1:

To exceed 95% satisfaction for the processing of Consumers' authorised demands. This target was achieved.

b. Key Target 2:

To meet the agreed Customers' requirements for the provision of ammunition Units of Space (UOS) and ammunition processing facilities. This target was achieved.

c. Key Target 3:

To exceed Consumers' perceived satisfaction of the Agency. This target was achieved.

d. Key Target 4:

To exceed 90% of Consumers' authorised demands within Supply Chain Processing Time (SCPT) Depot Processing Times (DPT). This target was achieved.

e. Key Target 5:

To exceed a one day improvement in receipts processing cycle times. This target was achieved.

f. Key Target 6:

To establish the unit cost per output baseline to enable subsequent measurement of efficiency improvements. This target was achieved in relation to the available resources. Work on deriving costs of output should be able to follow on from the results of the Activity Based Costing trial at ABSDA sites.

A series of strategies were introduced to improve performance in 1999/2000. They are Total Quality Management, Business Excellence, Activity Based Management, and Investors in People, together with improved information systems. I am confident that these measures will build on the excellent foundations laid by DSDA's predecessor organisations in delivering improvements in both quality of service and efficiency. An early indication of their success is the selection of DSDA as a finalist in the TNT Modernising Government Partnership Awards.

ABSDA ceased to exist on 31 March 1999. The Agency's ammunition functions were transferred to Defence Munitions and its non-explosives tasks were merged with a range of storage and distribution functions from the other Services and the MOD from DSDA.

Depleted Uranium Ammunition

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent research he has commissioned into a substitute for depleted uranium ammunition. [112840]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 7 March 2000]: The Ministry of Defence has for many years conducted research into a range of weapon materials and designs. Research continues to include the search for potential alternatives to depleted uranium and to identify and characterise their performance and environmental impact.

Radiation Monitoring

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the carrying out of radiation/contamination monitoring surveys at the entrance of submarine reactor chambers on a 12 hourly basis. [112844]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 7 March 2000]: All personnel are monitored immediately on exit from the reactor compartment on-board a submarine. As a routine, the entrance to the reactor compartment is monitored for contamination at least on a daily basis. During maintenance periods a radiation survey is undertaken on initial entry to the reactor compartment and repeated as necessary.

RAF Logistics Support Services

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the future of the RAF Logistics Support Services Agency. [113892]

Mr. Spellar: As part of the restructuring taking place within the Defence Logistics following the Strategic Defence Review, the RAF Logistics Support Services Agency will close on 31 March 2000. The Agency's constituent elements will be transferred elsewhere in Defence Logistics Organisation. It is not envisaged that this will result, at least initially, in any geographical relocations or redundancies, and staff will continue to operate from their current locations.

SCOTLAND

Tuition Fees

Mr. Grieve: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what European Union legislation prevents the Scottish Executive from funding Scottish students at universities in England in the manner proposed by the Executive that funding should be provided for such students at Scottish universities; and what recent advice he has received and from whom, on this matter. [112042]

Dr. Reid [holding answer 28 February 2000]: This is a matter for the Scottish Executive. It is neither the custom nor practice of the UK Government or the Scottish Executive in Scotland to publish their legal advice.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112667]

Dr. Reid: The annual Cabinet Office publication "Public Bodies" provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions list public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library of the House. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE and CJD

Mr. Drew: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the French Minister for Agriculture on the increased incidence of BSE and CJD in France. [109850]

Ms Quin: [holding answer 14 February 2000]: The latest European Commission report, dated 21 January 2000, stated that the French government had reported a total of 77 cases of BSE, including one case imported from Switzerland. We are aware of two cases of vCJD in France.

These issues are primarily for the Commission and individual member states, rather than for bilateral discussion between member states.

Farm Repossessions

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many farmers in the last three years have lost their businesses because of repossession of their farms by lenders. [110444]

Ms Quin: There are no statistics on farm repossessions but I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Meirionnydd Nant Conwy (Mr. Llwyd) on 6 March 2000, Official Report, column 528W.

Primate Exports

Mr. Wyatt: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the countries to which the UK exports primates; and what species of primates are imported to the UK other than macaques. [111150]

Ms Quin: During 1999 my Department issued health certification for the export of primates to the following countries:

Australia
Croatia
Czech Republic
Denmark
Finland
France
Gabon
Germany
Hungary
Indonesia

Israel
Poland
Republic of Ireland

Lowland Gorilla (Gorilla gorilla)
Gelada Baboon (Theropithecus gelada)
Lesser Slow Loris (Nycticebus pygmaeus).

Agriculture (Somerset)

Mr. Ashdown: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) pig units, (b) dairy units and (c) poultry units there were in Somerset in (i) 1990–91, (ii) 1996–97, (iii) 1997–98, (iv) 1998–99 and (v) 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [111962]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 February 2000]: The table shows the number of main holdings in Somerset with (a) pigs, (b) dairy cattle and (c) poultry.

Pig Industry

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what recent informal discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer to discuss state aid for the UK pig industry; [111719]

(2) what recent discussions he has had with HM Treasury regarding schemes to compensate pig farmers for BSE-related costs. [111720]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friends the Minister and the Chancellor of the Exchequer discuss many issues, both formally and informally. The Government are well aware of the current market conditions in the UK pig sector and of the representations which have been made for the introduction of some form of aid to compensate for the costs of BSE control measures falling on the pig sector. The scope for providing state aid is an issue which my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has looked at very closely and will continue to do so. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear, any investment by Government must be linked to the long-term strengthening of the industry as part of an agreed overall strategy. To this end, my officials are in close touch with the National Pig Association and others.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he had with representatives of the pig industry in January regarding schemes to compensate pig farmers for BSE-related costs. [111708]

Ms Quin: We have had a number of meetings with representatives of the pig industry in recent months which have included BSE-related costs. This is an issue which my right hon. Friend the Minister has looked at very closely and will continue to do so. As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister has made clear, any investment by Government must be linked to the long-term strengthening of the industry as part of an agreed overall strategy. To this end, my officials are in close touch with the National Pig Association and others.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what progress his Department has made in respect of state aid to restructure the UK pig industry; [113162]

(2) what requests he has made to the EU Commission in respect of state aid for restructuring the United Kingdom pig sector; [113160]

(3) what measures he is proposing to reduce the impact of the BSE-equivalent levy on UK pig farmers. [113161]

Ms Quin: As my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister said on 1 February, any investment by Government must be linked to long-term change in the structure of the industry. It must also be part of an agreed overall strategy; to this end, my officials are in discussion with the National Pig Association and others. Discussions on this topic are also taking place with the European Commission, including direct contacts between my right hon. Friend the Minister and the Agriculture Commissioner.

BSE Inquiry (Costs)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are the estimated public costs of the BSE Inquiry up to the date of expected reporting of the inquiry; of those costs, what has been spent during the inquiry (a) by the inquiry team and its staff and (b) within (i) the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, (ii) the Department of Health and (iii) other departments and in support of their current and ex-civil servants, (c) supporting current or previous external Government advisers and (d) supporting the relatives of people with vCJD. [112441]

Ms Quin: The estimated public cost of the BSE Inquiry, including the costs of liaison units and legal support for witnesses from the main departments involved, up to the date of expected reporting is about £27 million. This includes:

(a) The BSE Inquiry, including reimbursement of direct costs incurred by relatives of people with vCJD attending the hearings: £16 million;

(b)(i) Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food Liaison Unit, including support to current and former officials, former Ministers and current and previous external government advisers: £7.63 million;

(ii) Department of Health Liaison Unit, including support to current and former officials and former Ministers: £2.73 million;

(iii) Other administrations and departments sponsoring the Inquiry—liaison units including support to current and former officials and former Ministers: £0.5 million.

(c) Costs of support for current or previous external government advisers cannot be fully separated out and are therefore included in (b) (i) above;

(d) Reimbursement of direct costs incurred by relatives of people with vCJD attending the hearings: £70,000, included in (a) above.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the total amount of public money spent to date in the BSE Inquiry on fees for lawyers not directly employed by the Civil Service; and of these how much has been spent (a) on fees for (i) the Inquiry Chair, (ii) the solicitor to the inquiry and (iii) the main counsel to the inquiry, (b) in support of external Government advisers, (c) in support of employees or ex-employees of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and (d) in support of employees or ex-employees of the Department of Health. [112442]

Ms Quin: The total amount of public money spent to date on the BSE Inquiry for lawyers not directly employed by the Civil Service is about £9.1 million. Further costs are still being incurred.

(a) The Chairman of the Inquiry and the solicitor to the Inquiry have been paid their normal salaries as public servants while involved in the Inquiry. The Counsel team to the Inquiry has so far cost around £1.7 million. It is not appropriate to provide an indication of fees for individual Counsel;

(b) In support of external government advisers: £0.33 million;

(c) In support of employees or ex-employees of MAFF: £4.95 million;

(d) In support of employees or ex-employees of DH: £1.41 million

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what estimate he has made of the direct and opportunity costs met by (a) witnesses to the BSE inquiry and (b) their employers; and what level of reimbursement for such costs has been made from public funds. [112439]

Ms Quin: We are not in a position to estimate the direct and opportunity costs to witnesses or their employers of the Inquiry. Serving civil servants have participated in the Inquiry as part of their employment and relevant direct costs—travel and subsistence—are met from local budgets. Reimbursement from public funds of direct costs incurred by witnesses, who are no longer serving officials, in preparing and giving evidence to the Inquiry which have been paid by the Inquiry, MAFF, DH and other sponsoring departments, amounts to about £60,000.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to evaluate the relationship between the costs and outcome of the BSE Inquiry. [112438]

Ms Quin: Questions about the relationship between the costs and outcome of a public inquiry can only be addressed once the Report has been received by the Government and assessed by all the parties concerned.

Cattle Passports

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of cattle passports issued in 1999 contained herd number errors; and if he will make a statement. [112429]

Ms Quin: Of the 3,026,837 cattle passports issued in 1999, 0.007 per cent. contained herd number errors.

Mr. Öpik: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what percentage of cattle passports needed to be corrected after their initial issue in 1999; and if he will make a statement. [112428]

Ms Quin: Of the 3,026,837 cattle passports issued in 1999, 5.44 per cent. needed to be corrected after their initial issue.

Hop Producers

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent advice he has received from the European Commission with regard to payments to hop producers under special temporary measures under Regulation 1098/98; and when he expects such payments to be made. [113504]

Ms Quin [holding answer 7 March 2000]: We have received various advice from the Commission since the special temporary measures for hops were introduced in 1998. The Intervention Board Executive Agency, which administers the scheme in the UK, made payments to producer groups in respect of the 1999 harvest by end December last.

Day-old Chicks

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what is his policy on the methods used for slaughtering day-old chicks; and if he will make a statement; [112638]

(2) how many male day-old chicks were destroyed in the last year for which figures are available; what method was used for killing; and if he will take action to end the use of the present method and level of slaughtering. [112637]

Mr. Morley: The methods permitted for the killing of surplus chicks and embryos in hatchery waste are specified in EU Council Directive 93/119/EC and "the Welfare of Animals (Slaughter and Killing) Regulations 1995". The following methods are permitted in the UK: (a) the use of a mechanical apparatus producing immediate death; (b) exposure to gas mixtures; and (c) dislocation of the neck. The majority of surplus chicks are killed using one of the first two methods listed above, but no figures on the total numbers killed, or the method used, are available centrally.

These methods were approved after careful consideration. The Farm Animal Welfare Council assessed the mechanical destruction method, and recommended its use in preference to 100 per cent. carbon dioxide. There are currently no plans to change the permitted methods for disposing of surplus chicks.

The number of surplus male chicks disposed of annually is largely dependent on the demand for laying hens: being market-led, it is not a matter on which the Government would wish to legislate. However, research is continuing into the possibility of producing single sex eggs to help reduce the number of unwanted chicks.

Mr. Paice: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 3 February 2000, Official Report, column 721W, on day-old chicks, if he will list each of the countries within and outside the EU from which day-old chicks were imported in 1999, and the numbers imported from each country. [113186]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 March 2000]: The following table list the import of day-old chicks into the United Kingdom from countries within and outside the EU in 1999.

1999	Number of chicks imported
EU Countries
Austria	9,270
Belgium	45,121
Germany	34,816,225
Denmark	411,000
France	4,633,625
Republic of Ireland	58,025,730
Netherlands	1,073,968
	99,014,939
Non-EU Countries
USA	174,328
Canada	17,798
Total	192,126

The total for imports from other member states has been revised and therefore varies from the figure given in my reply of 3 February. The figures given in the table are still provisional and subject to further validation.

Genetically Modified Maize Products

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list those members of the Food Advisory Committee whose participation was limited in its consideration of the labelling of genetically modified maize products placed on the market by Agrevo (T25), Monsanto (Mon 810), Novartis (Bt 11) and Pioneer (MON 809), indicating the manner in which it was limited. [113354]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 March 2000]: No members were limited in their participation.

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library a copy of the (a) scientific information which the Food Advisory Committee considered before coming to its view in respect of the labelling of genetically modified maize products placed on the market by Agrevo (T25), Monsanto (Mon 810), Novartis (Bt 11) and Pioneer (MON 809), and (b) correspondence in respect thereof passing between the Food Advisory Committee and the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes. [113356]

Ms Quin [holding answer 6 March 2000]: (a) Summaries of the scientific information considered by the Food Advisory Committee are available in the Advisory Committee on Novel Foods and Processes Annual Report for 1996, which is lodged in the Library of the House.

(b) I have arranged for these papers to be placed in the Library of the House.

Fisheries

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the reduction in grant-in-aid to the Environment Agency for fisheries work. [112554]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 March 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to the hon. Member for New Forest, West (Mr. Swayne) on 27 October 1999, Official Report, column 922W.

Mr. Hilary Benn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the grant-in-aid from his Department for fisheries work by the Environment Agency for each of the last three years in (a) current prices and (b) constant prices. [112553]

Mr. Morley [holding answer 6 March 2000]: Grant-in-aid paid by MAFF to the Environment Agency for salmon and freshwater fisheries work (all figures in £ million) are as follows:

£ million

	(a) Current	(b) Constant
1997–98	7.4	7.4	(England and Wales)
1998–99	[1]22.1	[1]21.6	(England and Wales)
1999–2000	4.8	4.6	(England only)

[1] In 1998–1999 there was a temporary change in the rules whereby all revenue from licence fees was returned to Treasury but with an equivalent increase in grant-in-aid. The underlying figure for MAFF grant-in-aid is £7.9 million, which included a one-off additional payment of £0.5 million to assist with the enforcement of the salmon conservation byelaws.

Tree Felling Licences

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on how many occasions in each of the last five years breaches of tree felling licences have been brought to the notice of the Forestry Commission; and what enforcement or remedial action has resulted. [113034]

Mr. Morley: The Forestry Commission has investigated 13 breaches of felling licences in the last five years, as set out in the table.

Year ending 31 March	1996	1997	1998	1999	2000[1]
Number of breaches	5	3	2	1	2

Advice given or no further action	1	—	1	1	—

[1] Year to date

Mr. Chope: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what tree felling licences have been granted in respect of Avon Heath Country Park; how many trees are affected; how many trees have been felled; and how many have been felled in breach of the licence; [113033]

(2) what action the Forestry Commission is taking in response to reports that the RSPB is in breach of a tree felling licence granted in respect of Avon Heath Country Park in Dorset; and if he will make a statement. [113035]

Mr. Morley: The Forestry Commission has granted one felling licence in respect of Avon Health Country Park. This allows the owner to fell 86,000 trees by selectively felling and thinning 78 hectares of woodland. The Commission is currently investigating reports that the RSPB has felled trees which were not included in the licence.

Peat Compost

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 19W, on peat compost, (a) what percentage of and (b) how much compost used in his Department's estate gardens is peat; when peat compost will be phased out by his Department's estates; and if he will make a statement. [113346]

Mr. Morley: Records are not kept centrally detailing the amount of peat (if any) and peat substitutes that are used on the Ministry's gardens. To find this information would be time consuming and expensive because many contractors, subcontractors and suppliers would have to be approached for their records. Having said that, the Ministry does not have a large acreage of gardens; rather, we have smaller areas of landscaping and flower-beds around buildings.

As I said in my answer of 28 February, since 1993, the Ministry has had a policy that environmentally acceptable alternatives should be substituted for peat. We will, though, be issuing reminders shortly in line with our Greening Operations Strategy which was revised and reissued in June 1999.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Falkland Islands

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions the Government have had with the new Argentine administration about the Falkland Islands. [113340]

Mr. Battle: We have established a good working relationship with the new Argentine Government. The Prime Minister has met President De la Rua twice. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has met Rodriguez Giavarini. I attended the Argentine Presidential inauguration and the Secretary of State for Defence has met the Argentine President and Defence Minister.

On these and other occasions both sides have reaffirmed their commitment to the Joint Statement of July 1999 and to continue our dialogue on issues of common interest.

This does not affect our sovereignty over the Falkland Islands or our commitment to the Islanders' right to determine their own future.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the British High Commissioner to Sri Lanka last visited (a) the northern area of Sri Lanka and (b) Jaffna; and what reports he has made of his visit. [113429]

Mr. Hain: The British High Commissioner to Sri Lanka, Ms Linda Duffield, last visited the north of Sri Lanka from 17–20 January when she visited Vavuniya, Mannar and Trincomalee. She reported on the difficulties faced by those displaced by the conflict and has discussed this with the Government of Sri Lanka. The High Commissioner will be visiting Jaffna from 21–24 March.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which Ministers in his Department have visited Sri Lanka since 1 May 1997. [113433]

Mr. Hain: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 20 January 2000, Official Report, column 579W.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had within the European Union on the involvement of that organisation in the resolution of the conflict in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [113432]

Mr. Hain: The ethnic conflict in Sri Lanka is discussed frequently in EU forums.

International Labour Organisation Convention

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have ratified the International Labour Office Convention C138; and if he will make a statement. [113434]

Mr. Hain: We are taking steps to ratify ILO Convention 138. After a period of consultation between Government Departments, legislative amendments, necessary before ratification can be carried out, are being drafted. We will ratify the Convention as soon as Parliamentary procedures are completed.

Great Lakes Region

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the implications for the Great Lakes Region of UN Security Council Resolution 1291. [113425]

Mr. Hain: The adoption of Security Council Resolution 1291, providing for the establishment of a substantial UN observer force in the Democratic Republic of the Congo, is an important step forward. It is a clear demonstration of the Security Council's readiness to provide practical support to the Lusaka Agreement. It provides the framework for the UN and the international community to play a significant role in bringing peace to the Great Lakes region.

Britain wants to see results. That is why we want the observer force to deploy quickly so that it can begin its work, which includes drawing up an action plan for the comprehensive disarmament, demobilisation, resettlement and reintegration (DDRR) of all armed groups listed in the Lusaka Agreement. A credible DDRR plan is vital to the success of Lusaka and to lasting peace in the region.

And, as I made clear at January's special Security Council meeting, Britain is ready to consider a full UN peacekeeping force if the observer force deploys successfully, and the Lusaka signatories carry through their commitments.

Burundi

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the progress of the Burundian peace negotiations in Arusha. [113424]

Mr. Hain: The Arusha talks remain the key to lasting peace in Burundi. Nelson Mandela's arrival as Facilitator has increased the chances of a peace settlement. But many difficult problems remain and the situation on the ground is deteriorating.

In discussions with President Buyoya and other Heads of State attending the Burundi Summit in Arusha, I reaffirmed Britain's strong support for Nelson Mandela's facilitation and the peace process. The presence of many international leaders in Arusha attests to the strong international support for the talks.

We continue to urge all parties to tackle the difficult issues: a ceasefire, military reform, amnesties, and the transition to a broad based democratic government. We will continue to back the peace process.

St. Helena

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place the report containing the Wallace recommendations on the constitution of St. Helena in the Library. [113593]

Mr. Battle: I have arranged for copies of Mr. Wallace's "Review of the Constitution of St. Helena", 1987, to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Zimbabwe

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received from Zimbabwe of wide-scale incursions by squatters on to white-owned farms; what assessment he has made of the extent of Government involvement in these incursions; and if he will make a statement. [113579]

Mr. Hain: We have been following events closely, and have been concerned at the lack of action on the part of the police. The High Commissioner has spoken of our concern to a number of senior Cabinet Ministers. On 6 March I spoke to the Vice President who assured me that the Government were taking action to remove the trespassers from the farms.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Housing Benefit

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to allow registered social landlords to verify new tenant claims for housing benefit. [112623]

Angela Eagle: We have no plans to make it our policy to allow registered social landlords to verify evidence for Housing Benefit claims on behalf of the local authority.

While landlords can assist their tenants by collecting the necessary evidence and forwarding it to the local authority, there is a potential conflict of interest in any landlord certifying evidence on behalf of a tenant in order that the tenant's rent may be paid by way of Housing Benefit.

Mr. Sanders: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make it his policy to provide housing benefit to tenants of registered social landlords on the same basis as tenants of local authorities; and if he will make a statement. [112622]

Angela Eagle: Cases involving Housing Benefit claims from local authority tenants are not subject to rent officer controls over the amount of Housing Benefit payable because local authority rents are subject to rules set by the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions. In these cases, as landlords, local authorities provide Housing Benefit simply by rebating their tenants' rent accounts.

Cases involving Housing Benefit claims from tenants of registered social landlords are not referred to rent officers unless it appears to the local authority that the level of rent charged is unreasonably high or the accommodation is over-large.

Payments of Housing Benefit are made either directly to registered social landlords or to their tenants. We have no plans to empower registered social landlords to administer the Housing Benefit scheme in respect of their tenants.

Savings Limit

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 172W, to the hon. Member for Colchester, what the level of the savings limit set at £3,000 in April 1998 would be now if it had been uprated since then in line with the retail prices index. [112993]

Mr. Bayley: If the lower capital limit of £3,000, set in 1988, in the income-related benefits had been uprated in line with the retail price index it would be £4,878 at April 2000.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate the number of people entitled to winter fuel payments who have yet to receive them; [112947]

(2) if he will estimate the number of appeals against (a) failure to award and (b) level of winter fuel payments that (i) his Department has received, (ii) were successful and (iii) are still outstanding. [112948]

Angela Eagle: At the end of January 2000, it was estimated that around 99 per cent. of customers who qualified under the existing arrangements had received their full entitlement to a Winter Fuel Payment. The remaining 1 per cent. were those customers whose girocheques had been returned, uncollected, from the Post Office or who queried the amount paid.

Following the European Court's ruling in the Taylor case, we have announced our intention to extend help through the Winter Fuel Payment scheme to men as well as women aged 60 and over. At the same time we also announced our intention to make backdated payments to all people who will be included within the scope of the scheme in respect of the previous three winters (i.e. 1997–98, 1998–99, 1999–2000).

We are carefully considering what arrangements need to be made in order to issue payments accurately and securely to customers not already within the scope of the existing scheme. An announcement will be made as soon as possible once plans are further advanced.

A total of 43,000 customers have queried the level of their entitlement to a Winter Fuel Payment. Each claim was reconsidered in line with the Decision-Making and Appeal rules, resulting in the issue of a "top-up" payment to some customers. Where the original decision was not changed by the reconsideration, an appeal was sent to the Appeals Service. The total number of appeals to date is 255, but information on whether these have been successful or are still outstanding could only be obtained at a disproportionate cost.

Low-income Households

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 20 December 1999, Official Report, column 333W, on low-income households, if he will publish tables as in the answer which show the position for households which do not include a self-employed adult. [112808]

Angela Eagle: The information is available for the years shown in the tables. The latest information relates to the financial year 1997–98.

Notes:
1. The information comes from the 'Households Below Average Income' (HBAI) series. The estimates are presented on household income both Before Housing Costs and After Housing Costs in line with HBAI conventions. All the estimates in the table relate to families with an adult in paid work rather than households with an adult in paid work, but exclude households where there is a full-time self-employed adult.
2. The column headed "Total people in couple families" does not include couples without children.
3. The estimates based on the Family Expenditure Survey (FES) are for the United Kingdom. For 1988–89 and subsequent years, two years' data have been combined to improve the robustness of the results. For 1994–95 onwards, estimates are available from the larger Family Resources Survey (FRS) and relate to single financial years. The FRS results are for Great Britain.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the total number of disablement awards made in the UK to sufferers of asbestos-related diseases over the last five years for which figures are available broken down by (a) region and (b) occupation. [113329]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available has been placed in the Library.

Income Support

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost, in the latest financial year for which figures are available, of the provision of income support for persons from abroad. [113073]

Mr. Bayley: The estimated cost for 1998–99 of Income Support paid to people from abroad was approximately £150 million.

Notes:

1. Estimated annual expenditure figures are rounded to the nearest five million pounds.

2. Estimates may include a number of non-persons from abroad who receive Urgent Case Payments for other reasons.

3. Annual expenditure figures for Income Support have been based on an average of four quarters for the financial year, using numbers of cases and average weekly amounts.

4. Estimate does not include costs of administering the benefit.

New Deal (Lone Parents)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many persons in Wales at the latest available date received assistance under the New Deal for Lone Parents. [113072]

Angela Eagle: Since the start of the national NDLP programme in October 1998, 6,450 Lone Parents in Wales have agreed to participate in the programme. They have all been offered help and advice by their own NDLP Adviser, 2,410 have found a job, 590 have entered training or education. Advisers have also provided assistance in finding suitable child care; and claiming in-work benefits.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many lone parents have received letters inviting them to join the New Deal for Lone Parents. [113584]

Angela Eagle: 454,920 initial letters have been issued telling lone parents about the voluntary New Deal service during the National Programme (October 1998—December 1999). In addition 50,612 initial letters were issued during phase 1 and 2 (July 1997—October 1998). The letters are part of the overall strategy (including advertising locally and nationally, using TV, Radio and the Press) to make lone parents aware of the service available to them through New Deal for Lone Parents.

Family Credit (Fraud)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the level of fraudulent claims for Family Credit in the last five years. [113296]

Mr. Rooker: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

We do not have statistically valid figures for the level of Family Credit fraud

Mortgages

Mr. Jack: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish, for the last two calendar years (a) the reports furnished to his Department on the mortgage interest rates charged by the United Kingdom's top 20 lenders, (b) the dates upon which the average of these rates changed by one quarter of one per cent. or more and (c) the date and amount of any changes he made to his Department's own standard interest rate. [113364]

Mr. Bayley: The information is in the table.

Information on changes in the interest rates charged by different lending institutions is published monthly in Financial Statistics (Table 7.1L) which is compiled by the Office for National Statistics and published by The Stationary Office. The standard interest rate that is applied to the assessment of mortgage interest to be paid with Income Support and income based Jobseekers Allowance, is based on the average of Building Society rates. The Office for National Statistics notifies the Department each month of any movement in these rates. If there is a change of one quarter of a percentage point, immediate action is taken to amend the legislation to reflect this change in the standard interest rate.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Millennium Festival (Scotland)

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on the Millennium Festival in Scotland. [111092]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Millennium Festival in Scotland has been made possible by the Lottery distributing bodies including the Millennium Commission and the New Millennium Experience Company. They have come together to make available a fund of up to £11 million for community groups, large and small, to apply for funding. The variety of events happening in Scotland throughout the Year 2000 is considerable, from the first ever Millennium Commonwealth Youth Games in Edinburgh to a programme entitled "The Rights of Passage" in Dumfries and Galloway celebrating the notable dates in our life. The Unst Millennium Festival will be held during July 2000 and a number of projects are also happening in the Western Isles, Aberdeenshire and in Argyll and Bute—quite literally throughout the whole of Scotland.

Smaller awards are still available (up to £5,000) through the Awards for All scheme called "Awards for All . . . celebrating the Scottish Millennium Festival" up until the end of April 2000 and small community groups are still applying for this money. The New Millennium Experience Company has also established a website www.millenniumscotland.co.uk as part of the UK Festival website (www.festival2000.co.uk) and in the Scottish section alone there are already over 400 events which will happen in the Year 2000—a testimony to the work of the distributors and the New Millennium Experience Company in ensuring that everyone in Scotland has an opportunity to benefit from the celebration of the Millennium.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Brooke: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the subsequent beneficiaries of the £32 million to be repaid by the New Millennium Experience Company to the Millennium Commission have been advised of these forthcoming benefits. [113026]

Mr. Chris Smith: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the right hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will place in the Library copies of correspondence between NMEC and the Millennium Commission relating to the approval of further moneys from the Commission to NMEC on 5 February. [112833]

Mr. Chris Smith [holding answer 7 March 2000]: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. I shall write to the hon. Member in my capacity as Chairman of the Commission and place copies of my reply in the Libraries of the House.

National Lottery

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if it remains the policy of Her Majesty's Government to seek an efficient not-for-profit operator for the National Lottery as set out in his oral statement of 4 February 1998, Official Report, column 1052. [113171]

Mr. Chris Smith: We have indeed maintained the policy of seeking (and welcoming) any bids from efficient not-for-profit operators; but the selection of the next operator is of course a matter for the National Lottery Commission. The Government's objective is to maximise the returns to good causes and remove unnecessary profit margins. These aims will best be achieved through a robust competition. This has taken place and it is now up to the National Lottery Commission to evaluate the bids.

English Heritage

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list those organisations that have received Grants from English Heritage together with the amounts or the purpose of the Grants, in the last five years. [113172]

Mr. Alan Howarth: A consolidated list of Grants by category offered by English Heritage over the last five years is in the table, including a budget figure for the financial year 1999–2000. A full list of repair grants offered by English Heritage to buildings and monuments of outstanding national importance is published annually by English Heritage, and is available on request.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will make a statement on progress in negotiations with museums and galleries on the provision of free entry for adults. [113441]

Mr. Alan Howarth: Funds have been made available to permit free access for the over 60s, from April 2000, to the currently charging national museums funded by the Department for Culture, Media and Sport. We are continuing to assess the most effective ways of extending access in 2001. However, decisions will ultimately be taken by the Trustees.

Museum of the Moving Image

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if the British Film Institute has identified a permanent site for the re-location of the Museum of the Moving Image. [113443]

Janet Anderson: The recently announced plans for the South Bank Centre include a potential new home for the Museum of the Moving Image. This will allow for an improved and expanded Museum, to provide an interesting and educational showcase for the BFI's collections.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when the British Film Institute's Museum of the Moving Image will re-open. [113439]

Janet Anderson: Work on the new BFI Film Centre, which will incorporate the museum of the Moving Image, is scheduled in Phase One of the South Bank master plan, completion of which will depend on the planning process. In the meantime, the BFI is planning a touring exhibition which will greatly increase access to the collection.

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions his Department has had with the British Film Institute on the provision of a new permanent location for the Museum of the Moving Image. [113442]

Janet Anderson: The decision to seek a new permanent location for the Museum was taken by the Board of the BFI, and my Department has been kept closely in touch. The BFI proposes that the Museum will be housed at a bigger and better location within the newly developed South Bank. In the meantime, the BFI is planning a UK wide touring exhibition which will greatly increase access to the collection.

Millennium Commission (Projects)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport how many projects supported by the Millennium Commission (a) are fully operational, (b) will be operational during the summer and (c) will not be completed by 1 July. [113438]

Janet Anderson: This is a matter for the Millennium Commission. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will reply in his capacity as Chairman of the Commission, and place copies of his reply in the Libraries of the House.

Trafalgar Square (Pedestrianisation)

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what action his Department has taken to identify potential sources of funding for proposals for the partial pedestrianisation of Trafalgar Square. [113445]

Mr. Alan Howarth: The partial pedestrianisation of Trafalgar Square forms part of the wider "World Squares for All" project, for which the new Mayor for London will take over lead responsibility. Substantial financial support could come from the Mayor. Additional funding could be sought from the Heritage Lottery Fund and private sector sponsorship.

National Lottery Grants (Tewkesbury)

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will investigate the reasons for the level of National Lottery grants given to organisations in Tewkesbury. [113185]

Kate Hoey [holding answer 6 March 2000]: Tewkesbury has received a lower level of Lottery grants than the UK average. The Government wish to see a more equitable distribution of National Lottery funds across the UK. We have introduced a number of changes through the National Lottery Act 1998 and revised Policy Directions to the distributors which have already begun to improve the geographical spread of funding. My Department, jointly with Lottery distributors, has commissioned research aimed at investigating the reasons for the low take up of Lottery grants in certain areas. While the research concentrates particularly on former coalfield areas, we expect that it will also provide a number of valuable lessons about low take up in other areas, such as Tewkesbury. The first phase of this research has been published and copies have been placed in the Libraries of the House; the second phase will be published shortly.

Free TV Licences

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimates he has made of the number of families in the Elmet constituency who will benefit from the introduction of free TV licences for households with a member aged 75 years or over. [113415]

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate for each Scottish and Welsh constituency the number of households which will be entitled to a free TV licence (a) in total and (b) as a percentage of total households. [112841]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 March 2000]: I refer my hon. Friend and the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave to my right hon. Friend the Member for Alyn and Deeside (Mr. Jones) on 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 350W.

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what estimates he has made of the number of new households which will become entitled to a free TV licence in each of the next 15 years. [112842]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 March 2000]: We estimate that there are currently over three million households which include a person aged 75 or over and will consequently benefit from the introduction of free television licences for the over-75s. Estimates for future years are not available.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what discussions he has had with the Department of Social Security regarding the possibility of making a payment of the equivalent value to a TV licence to those aged over 75 years through the benefits system. [112850]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 March 2000]: My right hon. Friend has had no such discussions.

Film Funding

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list all National Lottery-funded films to date, together with in each case (a) the value of lottery support, (b) the total production cost, (c) the date of lottery grant, (d) the planned or actual release date, (e) the number of screens on which they were released, (f) box office receipts and (g) repayment of lottery funds made. [113511]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 March 2000]: I have today placed the information requested in respect of Lottery awards made in England in the Library of the House. I will write to the hon. Member in due course about awards made by the Arts Council of Wales and the Arts Council of Northern Ireland.

In Scotland film policy is a devolved matter and is now the responsibility of the Scottish Executive.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when regulations will be laid to bring into effect the television licence fee increases announced on 21 February and due to come into force on 1 April. [113952]

Mr. Chris Smith: On 21 February 2000, Official Report, column 1241, I announced that, from 1 April 1999, the fee for a colour television licence would increase from £101 to £104; the black and white licence fee will rise from £33.50 to £34.50. I have today laid before the House the regulations necessary to bring these fees into force.

The regulations also contain provisions in consequence of our proposal to introduce free television licences for people aged 75 or over from 1 November this year. Anyone aged 75 or over who needs to renew their licence between April and October will be able to purchase a short term licence at a reduced rate, based on the number of months covered. Similar provisions are included for people who, after 1 November, need to renew a licence less than 12 months before their 75th birthday.

We have also included in the regulations a provision to remove an anomaly of the existing concessionary licence scheme, for people in residential homes and sheltered accommodation. The effect of this is to include within the scope of the provision retired persons, whether male or female, aged 60 years or more.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Foundation Schools

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many foundation schools are within each of the education authorities identified as failing by the Schools Inspectorate. [112649]

Ms Estelle Morris: There is no specific overall category of failure in inspection reports published by the Office for Standards in Education (Ofsted) on the performance of local education authorities.

Funding Schemes

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the funding schemes administered by his Department, indicating the total funds of each scheme and the administration costs of each scheme as a percentage of the total funds. [112492]

Mr. Wills [holding answer 2 March 2000]: Total cost of departmental objectives (including the teachers pensions scheme) and the percentage that relates to internal costs, prepared on a resource basis for 1998–99, are as follows:

	Total cost £000	Internal cost £000	Percentage
Objective 1 Ensuring that all young people reach 16 with the skills, attitudes and personal qualities that will give them a secure foundation for lifelong learning, work and citizenship in a rapidly changing world	1,701,020	82,930	4.88
Objective 2 Developing in everyone a commitment to lifelong learning, so as to enhance their lives, improve their employability in a changing labour market and create the skills that our economy and employers need	10,172,042	90,776	0.89

Teacher Training

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what provision for training teachers in IT is being made from the New Opportunities Fund. [112977]

Mr. Wills: The New Opportunities Fund is making available £230 million to support the training of serving teachers and school library staff in the maintained sector in the effective use of information and communication technology. The training is available to all teachers in maintained schools.

Selection Ballot (Trafford)

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will provide (a) the full list of schools and (b) the total number of eligible parents for each school which has been used to set the petition threshold in connection with a parental ballot on selection in Trafford. [113025]

The list of parent eligible to vote is provided by the schools themselves and includes some duplication where parents have children attending different feeder schools. After entering all the names onto a single computer database the Electoral Reform (Ballot Services) Ltd. remove names entered more than once. The total number of eligible parents from the "cleared" database was 42,590 which resulted in a petition threshold of 8,518.

GCE and GCSE

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list, for each GCE and GCSE awarding body for each of the last three years, the total number of requests from candidates for (a) re-marks and (b) re-marks with reports, together with the total number of appeals against decisions lodged by individual examination centres. [112036]

Mr. Wicks: Following our 1998 review of the qualifications appeals system we introduced for the first time arrangements for the collection and publication of data on the number of requests for inquiries on results, including re-marks, and appeals. The new arrangements were introduced from summer 1999 and the Qualifications and Curriculum Authority is currently finalising the first set of statistics which will be published later this month.

Nautical Studies

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what assessment he has made of the contribution of the GCSE course in nautical studies in relation to the understanding and promotion of best practice in sea safety. [113544]

Mr. Wicks: We have not made an assessment of how the GCSE in nautical studies may contribute to sea safety.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the annual cost of administering the GCSE examination in nautical studies. [113545]

Mr. Wicks: The GCSE in nautical studies is offered by the Assessment and Qualifications Alliance. The total costs incurred by the awarding body for offering the syllabus in 1999 were £12,282.

Mr. Andrew George: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many students took the GCSE examination in nautical studies in (a) 1995–96, (b) 1996–97 and (c) 1997–98; and how many he estimates will take it in 1999–2000. [113547]

Mr. Wicks: The number of candidates entered for the Assessment and Qualifications Alliance's GCSE in nautical studies was 144 in 1995–96, 118 in 1996–97, and 105 in 1997–98. An estimate for the 1999–2000 entry will not be available from the awarding body until later in the month.

Unemployment (Ethnic Minorities)

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what has been the change in the number of unemployed individuals from ethnic minorities between 1997 and the latest date for which figures are available. [113523]

Miss Melanie Johnson [holding answer 7 March 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Shaun Woodward, dated 8 March 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on unemployed individuals from ethnic minorities.

Latest available non-seasonally adjusted estimates from the Labour Force Survey (LFS) show that in the autumn (September to November) quarter of 1999 the number of ILO unemployed from all ethnic minorities in the UK was 203,000. This compares to 266,000 in the same period in 1997; a reduction of 23,000.

People interviewed in the LFS are asked to classify their own ethnic origin. The figures given represent people who did not classify themselves as being of White origin.

The measure of unemployment derived from the LFS is defined on a consistent and internationally recognised basis set out by the International Labour Organisation (ILO). It counts as unemployed people who are a) without a paid job, b) available to start work within the next two weeks and c) have either looked for work in the last four weeks or are waiting to start a job already obtained.

HEALTH

Paediatric Intensive Care

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to provide paediatric intensive care facilities in the Royal Bolton Hospital; [104287]

(2) what plans he has to provide more paediatric intensive care facilities in the Greater Manchester Clinical Directorate. [104283]

Yvette Cooper: There are no plans to provide paediatric intensive care facilities at the Royal Bolton Hospital as it would not be appropriate for paediatric intensive care to take place in a District General Hospital setting which would not have either the required skills or bed numbers.

Any perceived need to increase the number of paediatric intensive care beds in the Greater Manchester area will be examined by the North West Specialist Group in consultation with the Paediatric Intensive Care Commissioning Group and the relevant lead health authority. In the event of a subsequent review then the following areas would be examined as part of that process; number of admissions, number of refusals, average length of stay and occupancy rates in relation to the facilities currently available and level of dependency of the child.

Childhood Cancer

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases have been reported this year and in the past three years of childhood cancer being caused by electric fields; and if he will make a statement. [108590]

Yvette Cooper: It is not possible to attribute any individual cases of childhood cancer to electric fields. The United Kingdom Childhood Cancer Study, published in December 1999 found no evidence to link childhood cancer with exposure to magnetic fields from the electricity supply. Their report on electric fields is expected later this year. In 1992, the National Radiological Protection Board's Advisory Group on Non-ionising Radiation examined in detail the evidence for an association between the incidence of childhood cancer and exposure to electromagnetic fields. They concluded that there was no clear evidence of an adverse health effect at the levels of electromagnetic field to which the public is normally exposed. A further review which will consider electric and magnetic fields independently, will be published later this year.

Genetically Modified Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the antibiotics to which marker genes used in the production of genetically modified crops convey resistance and the medical uses of those antibiotics. [108628]

Yvette Cooper: Marker genes conveying resistance to a number of antibiotics have been used in the production of genetically modified crops around the world. Those used in the development of Genetically Modified (GM) crops that have been submitted for evaluation in the UK, either for food use or for release to the environment (either marketing consent or for experimental releases), are listed in the table:

Gene	Antibiotic
Kan' (nptII or neo)	Amnioglycoside antibiotics including kanamycin, and neomycin
Strep'/spec' (or aad)	Streptomycin and spectinomycin
Amp' (or bla)	Narrow spectrum βlactam antibiotics such as ampicillin and amoxycillin
Tc	Tetracycline
NptII	Amikacin
Hpt	Hygromycin

In some instances marker genes have been used in the early laboratory stages of the development of GM crops but are not present in the final crop plants. In addition, all foods derived from GM crops that are currently available in Europe are highly processed before consumption and the genetic material is no longer viable.

The medical uses of these antibiotics are as follows:

Antibiotic	Medical uses
Kanamycin, neomycin (aminoglycosides)	Kanamycin is not commonly used now. Neomycin is used locally for ear or skin infections and may be used to reduce microbial load prior to bowel surgery. It is not used parenterally
Streptomycin, spectinomycin	Streptomycin and spectinomycin are of value in the treatment of serious infections such as TB, and for treating gentamicin-resistant enterococcal endocarditis. They are also used in the treatment of gonorrhoea
Ampicillin, amoxycillin	βlactam antibiotics are widely used to treat all forms of infection
Tetracyclines	Group of broad-spectrum antibiotics used to treat acne, respiratory infections and sexually transmitted diseases. Also used in treatment of infections in penicillin-allergic patients
Amikacin	Another aminoglycoside used to treat serious Gram-negative infections, especially those caused by organisms resistant to gentamicin (the aminoglycoside of choice)
Hygromycin	Veterinary antibiotic

The safety of any genetically modified food is carefully and rigorously assessed before it can be marketed in the United Kingdom. This evaluation will include an assessment of any potential adverse effects on health of the novel food, including the health implications of any antibiotic resistance markers that may be present in the food, taking a precautionary approach.

Global Warming

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it his policy to advise health authorities against the installation in hospitals of air conditioning and refrigerant systems which contain substances known to contribute significantly to global warming. [109331]

Yvette Cooper: It is the Department's policy to achieve best environmental practice and it is committed to the efficient use of energy and resources. This includes taking action to reduce/minimise pollution or the risk of pollution, including ozone-depleting substances and greenhouse gases.

While formulating the Strategy for 'Greening' the National Health Service, NHS Estates (an executive agency of the Department) will address the need to reduce greenhouse gas emissions, which contribute to global warming, alongside other environmental factors, such as waste prevention and water conservation.

Worcestershire Hospitals

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (a) change of use and (b) additional facilities are planned for the Newtown Hospital site in Worcestershire. [109826]

Yvette Cooper: The Newtown Hospital site will be retained for the delivery of mental health services by the newly created Worcester Community and Mental Health National Health Service Trust, which comes into effect from 1 April 2000. The site will also provide some acute services that support the new Worcestershire Acute Hospital as set out in the approved Full Business Case for a New Hospital in Worcester.

However, I understand options are currently being explored around the suitable use of the main building on the Newtown site.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when the new district general hospital at Worcester will be fully operational. [109827]

Yvette Cooper: The new £91 million Worcestershire Acute Hospital is due for completion in January 2002 and will be fully operational by the spring of 2002.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what agreement has been reached between Shropshire and Worcestershire health authorities on hospital provision following the re-organisation of hospital services in Kidderminster. [109823]

Yvette Cooper: The Government are mindful of Worcestershire health authority's responsibilities to ensure continuity and equity of access to services to neighbouring health authorities like Shropshire.

Shropshire health authority was consulted on the proposals outlined in "Investing In Excellence" and informed of Ministers' decisions to approve the service changes and the Worcestershire Trust mergers. As soon as the clinical working group's advice on the timing of inpatient service moves from Kidderminster Hospital has been received, and a firm decision made, the two health authorities and the new Trusts will obviously discuss in full the issues for hospital services provision.

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when (a) psychiatry, (b) orthopaedics, (c) trauma, (d) gynaecology, (e) urology, (f) medicine, (g) vascular surgery and (h) general surgery services will cease to be provided at Kidderminster Hospital. [109825]

Yvette Cooper: There are no firm timescales at present regarding the movement of services from Kidderminster Hospital. Twelve clinical working groups, comprised of consultants from all three acute hospitals in Worcestershire and other healthcare professionals, have been set up to look at how and when it would be appropriate to implement the changes to inpatient services at Kidderminster as outlined in the "Investing In Excellence" strategy.

The groups will report back to the new shadow board of the Worcestershire Acute Trust by the end of March 2000. Decisions will then be taken on timescales, following which a comprehensive public information campaign will be implemented across the county.

Kidderminster residents will still have access to 80 per cent. of the healthcare provided at Kidderminster Hospital, including outpatient clinics, day case surgery and rehabilitation and to comprehensive primary care services.

Cancer

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures showing the composite index for early detection of cancer in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 for (i) England, (ii) East and North Hertfordshire, (iii) West Hertfordshire and (iv) the health authority in the prospering growth area with the (1) lowest figure and (2) highest figure. [109748]

Yvette Cooper: The composite index for early detection of cancer consists of the combined coverage figures for the eligible populations for the National Health Service breast screening programme and the NHS cervical screening programme. For the purposes of this answer we have broken down the figures, and the information requested is in the table:

Percentage

For cervical cancer at the same point highest coverage was Cambridge and Huntingdon with 89.4 per cent. The lowest was South Essex with 83.9 per cent.

At 31 March 1999, the prospering areas: growth areas the health authority with the highest coverage of cervical screening was Buckinghamshire with 87.7 per cent. The lowest was Berkshire with 82.4 per cent.

Mr. Lilley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish figures showing the composite index for five year survival rates for breast and cervical cancer in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99 for (i) England, (ii) East and North Hertfordshire, (iii) West Hertfordshire and (iv) the health authority in the prospering growth area with the (1) lowest figure and (2) highest figure. [109755]

Yvette Cooper: The 1997–98 figures for the cancer survival rates indicator were published in "Quality and Performance in the NHS: High Level Performance Indicators" in June 1999, copies of which are available in the Library. Figures for 1998–99 will be published later this year.

Doctors (Criminal Records)

Mr. Willis: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if the General Medical Council is required to notify doctors' criminal records to him; [109943]

(2) how many doctors currently registered to practise have criminal records. [109942]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not available centrally. The General Medical Council is not able to provide this information as not all convictions are reported to them, for example minor driving offences. However, doctors working in the National Health Service are exempt from the Rehabilitation of Offenders Act 1974 and when applying for National Health Service posts are expected to declare all previous or pending prosecutions or convictions, including those considered "spent" under the Act.

We are taking action to strengthen existing recruitment and selection procedures. In guidance to be issued shortly, NHS employers will be required to include on the application form a declaration by the applicant of any disciplinary or other action taken against them or anticipated by the police, or by any overseas licensing or regulatory body.

Changes to the regulations governing general practice will require doctors working in general practice, including doctors who work as locums or assistants, to make similar declarations.

Once the General Medical Council has been made aware of a conviction, normally by the police, the case is considered through the conduct procedures, which may result in sanctions that affect the doctor's registration.

Influenza Immunisation

Mr. Pollard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 3 February 2000, Official Report, column 710W, on influenza immunisation for healthcare workers, which National Health Service trusts included immunising healthcare staff as part of their planning for this winter; and what proportion of healthcare staff in each trust were immunised against influenza. [110183]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is not available centrally.

Advertising Budget

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his Department's advertising budget for (a) 1999–2000 and (b) 2000–01. [110256]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 16 February 2000]: The Department's budget for communications—including campaigns such as the tobacco education strategy—in 1999–2000 is £31 million. There is no separate budget for advertising. No information is available at present on the budget for the year 2000–01.

Post-natal Clinics

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve access to post-natal clinics for people in rural areas. [110778]

Yvette Cooper: The Government's strategy for National Health Service maternity services, of which post-natal care is an integral part, is the provision of accessible, responsive user-focused services that offer greater choice, continuity of care and control to women.

It is, however, for local health authorities and NHS trusts to develop post-natal service provision that best meets the needs of local people in light of competing priorities, available resources and evidence of effectiveness.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many senior civil servants from an ethnic minority background are employed in his Department; and how many of them are (a) men and (b) women. [110685]

Yvette Cooper: As at 1 April 1999, 14 members of the senior civil service in the Department were from an ethnic minority background (3.8 per cent. of staff with ethnicity recorded). Of these, there were five women and nine men.

Plants (Wellington and Skipton Houses)

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how the contract for the provision of plants in Wellington House and Skipton House is managed; and what plans he has to change the contractual arrangement. [110947]

Yvette Cooper: The provision and maintenance of plants forms part of the Cleaning Contract for all of the Department's central London buildings, which is managed on behalf of the Department by a Facilities Management Company. There are no plans to change this arrangement.

Mr. Gray: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what the cost of the provision of plants in Wellington House and Skipton House was in 1999; and what the budgeted cost for 2000 is. [110948]

Yvette Cooper: The cost of the provision and maintenance of internal and external plants is included as part of the overall contract cost for the provision of cleaning services to the Department's central London buildings. It is not budgeted for separately. However, our best estimate is an annual cost to the Department of about £4,000 for Wellington House and £2,000 for Skipton House.

Peat Compost

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps he is taking to phase out the use of peat compost in gardens (a) owned and (b) tended by his Department; and if he will make a statement. [110724]

Yvette Cooper: There is no record of the Department having purchased peat. However, should the need arise the Department would propose to substitute the use of all slow renewables with organic wastes such as coir, manure, leaf mould or bark chippings.

Departmental Energy Use

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the electricity used by his Department is generated from renewable sources; and if he will make a statement. [111038]

Yvette Cooper: Buildings occupied by the Department and its agencies currently purchase energy from utility companies via contracts let by the buying agency. The Department has no information about the proportion of energy supplied by the utility companies that comes from renewable resources.

Research and Development

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the programmes of research funded under his Department's policy research programme, indicating (i) the organisation holding the research contract, (ii) the research unit undertaking the research, (iii) the start date of the contract, (iv) the end date of the contract, (v) the date of the most recent review of the programme, and (vi) whether negotiations are under way for a new contract and the stage reached in these. [110946]

Yvette Cooper: The information is given in the table. Following independent review of the Unit's programmes of research, the Department is currently considering new unit contracts.

Contractor	Name of research unit	Current contract start and end dates	Date of most recent review
University of Kent	Personal Social Services Research Unit	April 1996-March 2001	February 1999

University of Bristol	Dartington Social Research Unit	January 1996-December 2000	September 1998
University of London	Thomas Coram Research Unit	January 1996-December 2000	February 1999

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if he will list, in cash terms and at constant prices, his Department's total spending on research and development in each of the last five years and the projected expenditure in each of the next five years; [110944]

(2) if he will list in cash terms and at constant prices, the spending on his Department's policy research programme in each of the last five years and the projected expenditure in each of the next five years. [110945]

Yvette Cooper: The expenditure in cash terms at constant prices (1999–2000) for the policy research programme and National Health Service research and development levy over the last five years are shown in the table. Expenditure in the next five years is expected to continue at a similar level.

[1] The NHS research and development levy was first created in April 1996 and figures for NHS research and development prior to this are not available on the same basis.

[2] Estimate.

Influenza

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of cases of influenza per 100,000 of the population (a) in England and (b) in each health authority in England for each winter in each of the years from 1984–85 to 1999–2000; and if he will make a statement. [110798]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is not collected centrally. Influenza activity in England is monitored through the Royal College of General Practitioners sentinel surveillance scheme, which records the number of first visits to participating general practitioners of patients with influenza-like illness. This allows calculation of a rate for those cases of influenza presenting in general practice at any given point during the year and allows comparisons with other years. It is not possible to estimate a total figure for cases of influenza each winter from these data. The information is not collected by health authority area.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the number of working days lost due to the recent flu outbreak. [111148]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health which of the measures contained in the Government's pandemic contingency plans were deployed during the recent flu outbreak, with particular reference to use of anti-virals to limit the spread of infection. [111147]

Yvette Cooper: We are in the interpandemic period ('phase zero' of the pandemic plan) and were throughout the winter period. The United Kingdom Health Department's Multiphase Contingency Plan for Pandemic Influenza was not implemented. A flu pandemic involves the emergence of a completely new strain of influenza virus and is a global phenomenon. We last saw a pandemic in 1968.

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the arrangements that were put in place prior to the recent flu outbreak to protect (a) health workers and (b) at risk groups by means of vaccination. [111146]

Yvette Cooper: A record 8.6 million doses of vaccine were available prior to the winter flu season, of which 7.8 million doses have been distributed to meet orders. Data for flu immunisation uptake among the risk groups is derived from the General Practice Research Database by the Public Health Laboratory Service. Recent changes to the database mean it is not yet possible to provide uptake rates for last year. We expect data to be available within the next few months. In the past, vaccine uptake has not been nearly as high as the Department would like and the Chief Medical Officer has already announced that he will be looking at ways of improving uptake in the future.

National Health Service trusts were advised that they could include immunising healthcare staff as part of their winter planning last year. The decision to offer the vaccine and which groups of staff this should be offered to, were matters for local decision. Employers were not required to collect information on take up.

Recycling

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of documentation used by his Department is (a) made from recycled paper and (b) collected for recycling. [111601]

Yvette Cooper: The Department's environmental strategy supports the aim to achieve best environmental practice with a commitment to conserve paper. The paper used to print documentation contains 20 per cent. post-consumer de-inked fibre.

The Department has a paper re-cycling scheme but does not record the recycling of documentation in isolation.

Hospital Waiting Lists

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the money which he has promised to tackle waiting lists represents an additional financial commitment distinct from previous commitments; and if he will make a statement. [111421]

Mr. Denham: Baseline allocations to health authorities for 2000–01 were announced on 21 December 1999. The total sum of £34 billion included £276 million to lever performance for waiting lists and times. This is over and above funds given for waiting lists and times in 1999–2000.

MMR Vaccine

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of children aged 24 months in (a) the United Kingdom and (b) Greater London have had the MMR vaccine; and what level of take-up is recommended to avoid outbreaks of (i) mumps, (ii) measles and (iii) rubella. [111285]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 22 February 2000]: Quarterly coverage data from the Public Health Laboratory Service's COVER programme shows uptake of measles, mumps and rubella vaccine at age 24 months at September 1999 as 88 per cent. for the United Kingdom. Uptake in the London region was 80 per cent.

The level of uptake of the vaccine recommended to avoid outbreaks of mumps, measles and rubella is 95 per cent. This level of uptake is sufficient to prevent accumulation of pools of susceptible individuals that provide the opportunity for transmission of these diseases.

Mr. Burstow: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the likelihood of a localised measles outbreak in communities with a low MMR vaccine uptake; and what notification he has received of such outbreaks in the last two years. [111286]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 22 February 2000]: Large measles outbreaks can occur only when the proportion of children susceptible to measles exceeds target levels. These target levels vary by age and have been defined in the World Health Organisation strategy for measles elimination in Europe. The proportion of children susceptible to measles in the United Kingdom can be estimated from vaccine coverage data and from seroprevalence studies which estimate the number of people without protective levels of antibodies to measles.

The Public Health Laboratory Service routinely uses both sources of data to help to predict the likely emergence of measles outbreaks. If the current levels of vaccine coverage are maintained, large measles outbreaks in schools are not likely to occur until after 2001. Smaller outbreaks among communities with lower than average coverage may occur sooner. The Department of Health is aware of two such outbreaks in communities with low immunisation coverage. These began at the end of 1997 and at the end of 1999 and are described in the Communicable Disease Report of 28 January 2000, copies of which have been placed in the Library.

Cancer and Heart Disease

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if it is his policy that future increases in funds for primary care groups will be designated for improving cancer services and coronary heart disease care, with particular reference to the most disadvantaged patients; [110359]

(2) if it is his policy that future increases in funds for health authorities and primary care groups will be designated for addressing inequalities within the National Health Service. [110360]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 22 February 2000]: The objective of resource allocation is to distribute National Health Service funds fairly through health authorities to primary care groups, based on the healthcare needs of populations.

We are committed to modernising all aspects of care and treatment. But the priority is to deal with the biggest killers: cancer, coronary heart disease and stroke. This will help tackle inequalities as the burden of these diseases falls heavily on the most disadvantaged.

It is for health authorities in partnership with primary care groups and other local stakeholders to determine how best to use their funds to meet national and local priorities for improving health and modernising services. Their local strategies are set out in Health Improvement Programmes. These Programmes bring the Government's national priorities together with local priorities. There is particular emphasis on addressing areas of major health inequality in local communities and investing in primary care.

Health Improvement Programmes are underpinned by Service and Financial Frameworks. These frameworks set out the levels of resources allocated to support the local contribution to the national and local targets and priorities set out in the Health Improvement Programmes.
We have asked the Advisory Committee on Resource Allocation to consider how resource allocation can contribute to the reduction of avoidable health inequalities.

CS Spray

Mrs. Brinton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action his Department has taken following the publication of the report of the Committee on Toxicity, Mutagenicity and Carcinogenicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment on CS spray, published in September of last year, particularly with regard to those being treated with neuroleptic drugs; and if he will make a statement. [111804]

Yvette Cooper: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary has considered the Committee of Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment's (COT) report on the operational use of CS spray by police officers, and has concluded that there are no grounds to remove CS spray from police use. The Association of Chief Police Officers has noted the report and accepted its finding that CS spray should be used only within current operational guidelines.

The COT recommended follow-up studies on individuals treated for the immediate effects of CS spray. The Department of Health is providing technical advice to the Home Office as that Department develops practical ways to take forward this recommendation, which will include gathering information on affected individual's use of neuroleptic drugs.

Irritable Bowel Syndrome

Mr. Crausby: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent research his Department has (a) commissioned and (b) evaluated on links between fluoride in drinking water and irritable bowl syndrome. [112320]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 28 February 2000]: The Department has not commissioned any such research, and is not aware of any research demonstrating that concentrations of fluoride permitted in drinking water in the United Kingdom affect irritable bowel syndrome.

Fluoride

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when he will publish the results of the scientific review of fluoride and health commissioned from York University. [112099]

Yvette Cooper: The National Health Service Centre for Reviews and Dissemination at the University of York is expected to provide their report to Ministers in the spring. It is intended that this report will be published shortly thereafter.

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research his Department has commissioned on fluoride in (a) food, (b) soft drinks, (c) milk and (d) dental hygiene products. [112098]

Yvette Cooper: The Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food/Department of Health Joint Food Safety and Standards Group (JFSSG) has recently completed a survey of fluoride in the 1997 Total Diet Study, a national survey representative of the main types and proportions of foods making up the typical United Kingdom diet. This will show the amount of fluoride in the diet as a whole and in specific food groups including milk and beverages including soft drinks. The results are currently being processed and will be published in full. In addition a test of urinary fluoride is planned for inclusion in the forthcoming National Diet and Nutrition Survey.

Surrogate Births

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make it a requirement that the NHS should provide for women who have had a radical hysterectomy following cervical cancer, the opportunity to have eggs frozen with a view to surrogate birth at a later stage. [112062]

Yvette Cooper: It is the responsibility of clinicians who are providing radical treatments to patients which might affect their fertility, to discuss with them the possibility of storing eggs, embryos or sperm if they feel this is appropriate.

Whether these stored gametes should then be made available for a possible surrogate birth is a matter for those individuals in consultation with their clinicians. We would of course recommend that health authorities seek legal advice before considering funding a surrogacy arrangement on the National Health Service.

NHS Logo

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated total cost to the NHS of the changeover to the national logo, broken down by estimated cost per (a) health authority, (b) health trust, (c) regional organisation and (d) other NHS body; and what is the longest timescale envisaged for the completion of the exercise. [111870]

Yvette Cooper: Adoption of the National Health Service mark is being undertaken as items come up for replacement in the normal course of business. As a result, no NHS organisation has been required to undertake any additional work and no additional costs to NHS organisations are envisaged. New NHS organisations formed as the result of mergers will save money by adoption of the existing mark rather than having to invest in designing a new logo.

No deadline has been set for NHS organisations to apply the NHS mark universally. Health Authorities have been asked to adopt the existing NHS mark on stationery by January 2001, and NHS trusts by April 2001.

Osteoporosis

Ms Perham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to improve health education and preventative programmes for older people at risk of osteoporosis. [111995]

Yvette Cooper: An Osteoporosis Strategy was launched in June 1998 by the then Minister for Public Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Dulwich and West Norwood (Ms Jowell) at the Sixth Bath Conference on Osteoporosis and Bone Mineral Measurement. The Strategy consisted of a Quick Reference Primary Care Guide on prevention and treatment, a laminated desk top guide, and a local health action sheet. Central to the Strategy was the Royal College of Physicians evidence-based Clinical Guidelines on the treatment and prevention of osteoporosis. This has provided a firm basis for health authorities to develop their own strategies.

Information on all these initiatives is available on the Department of Health's website at www.open.gov.uk/doh/osteop.htm.

Officials in the Department of Health also work closely with the National Osteoporosis Society (NOS) who are the leading charity in this field. NOS are in receipt of departmental funding to assist them with their work in increasing awareness about this disease among clinicians and members of the public.

Human Genetics Commission

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what annual budget will be available to the Human Genetics Commission. [111961]

Yvette Cooper: The Human Genetics Commission is still establishing its work programme and its budget has not yet been finalised for 2000–01 and subsequent years.

Tuberculosis

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of tuberculosis there were in (a) the constituency of Hereford, and (b) nationwide, in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [112433]

Yvette Cooper: The available information from the Public Health Laboratory Service is given in the table. Notifications data are collected by local authority and are not routinely available by health authority. Data are not available by constituency. The final data for 1999 are not yet available and data for the five years up to 1998 are provided.

Notifications of tuberculosis 1994–98

1994	0	5,590

1996	1	5,654

NOIDS database, CDSC, 2 March 2000

The United Kingdom has an excellent record of tuberculosis control and notifications have reached the relatively low levels of around 6,500 cases a year from nearly 50,000 in 1950. This success is against a recent worldwide resurgence in tuberculosis that is having a small but important impact on trends in the United Kingdom, as a result we have recently seen small annual increases in the incidence of tuberculosis.

To combat these increases we have taken steps to strengthen the surveillance, prevention and control of tuberculosis, including drug resistant tuberculosis within the United Kingdom. Recent developments include:

the commencement of work on ongoing enhanced surveillance of tuberculosis to improve monitoring; the appointment of Regional Epidemiologists to help towards a more co-ordinated approach to surveillance;

the strengthening of surveillance of drug and multidrug-resistant tuberculosis through a scheme co-ordinated by the Public Health Laboratory Service (PHLS);

the development—by the PHLS—and availability of more rapid diagnostic and drug susceptibility tests for tuberculosis, which can be used where there is a presence of risk factors which might predispose towards multidrug-resistant tuberculosis; the co-ordination of the PHLS's activities through the new Tuberculosis Programme.

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many children in Hereford have (a) had and (b) not had the BCG test and vaccination at the usual age in each of the last five years; and if he will make a statement. [112432]

Yvette Cooper: Information about the number of children in Hereford Health Authority who have received the tuberculin test and BCG vaccination to protect against tuberculosis is contained in the table together with resident population estimates for children.

Herefordshire Health Authority: tuberculin tests and BCG vaccinations, and number of children resident by age group

Department of Health: Statistics Division SD2B

Because of severe manufacturing problems at Medeva Pharma, the only licensed United Kingdom supplier, supply of BCG and Tuberculin PPD vaccines continues to be disrupted. Stocks being received are insufficient to support the United Kingdom's full immunisation programme and the Department has had no alternative other than to suspend the routine BCG immunisation in schools for children aged 10–14 until continuity of vaccine supply can be guaranteed. Vaccine is being issued, therefore, to immunise people in higher risk categories only, such as neonates at higher risk, contacts of cases, new immigrants and healthcare workers.

The Department is actively seeking alternative supplies of BCG vaccine in consultation with the World Health Organisation.

Midwives (North West)

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the total number of midwifery vacancies in (a) England and (b) the North West Region. [111816]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 1 March 2000]: The available information is contained in the table.

New Public Bodies

Mr. Redwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the new public bodies established by his Department since May 1997. [112663]

Yvette Cooper: The annual Cabinet Office Publication "Public Bodies" provides information on a range of public bodies. The 1997 edition lists those public bodies in existence prior to May 1997. The 1998 and 1999 editions list public bodies in existence in subsequent years. Copies of these publications have been placed in the Library. Copies are also available on the Cabinet Office website (www.cabinet-office.gov.uk/quango).

General Practitioners

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the number of general practitioners per 1,000 population in (a) Oxfordshire, (b) England and (c) the United Kingdom in each year since 1990. [112647]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is in the table. Issues relating to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for their respective administrations.

Department of Health General and personal Medical Services Statistics and ONS Population Data

Mr. Breed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what percentage of the population live (a) within one mile of, (b) over one mile from and (c) over three miles from their nearest GP in (i) urban and (ii) rural areas. [112820]

Ms Stuart: The information is not available in the form requested.

However, an analysis based on the Exeter family health services database indicates that in urban areas 94 per cent. of patients live within 1 mile of their nearest surgery, 5 per cent. between 1 and 2.5 miles, and 1 per cent. live more than 2.5 miles away. In rural areas, the figures are 72 per cent, 19 per cent, and 9 per cent. respectively.

It should be noted that in each of these analyses, percentage of patients will not be the same as percentage of population, due to the effects of any local list inflation.

Nursing Students

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many students started a (a) diploma in nursing and (b) degree in nursing courses in (i) 1997, (ii) 1998 and (iii) 1999; and what was the drop-out rate for each year's intake. [112918]

Mr. Denham: Information on the numbers of students commencing nursing diploma and degree courses for the period 1997 to 1999 and attrition rates for 1997 and 1998 are shown in the table. Data on students entering training are published by English National Board in their Annual Report. The numbers entering training in 1999–2000 are based upon the latest forecast from education consortia. It is not possible to provide an attrition rate for the 1999 student intakes since they are incomplete.

	1997–98	1998–99	1999–00
Nursing diploma intake	14,162	15,410	16,552
Attrition	16.1 per cent.	5.9 per cent.	n/a
Nursing degree intake	1,214	1,202	1,805
Attrition	13.3 per cent.	8.2 per cent.	n/a

Notes:
1. Intake data are taken from the English National Board annual report for 1997–98 and 1998–99 and the Financial and Workforce Planning Returns for 1999–2000.

Vaccines

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement on the wastage rate of vaccines used by the NHS resulting from poor storage or distribution conditions and the cost of such wastage to the NHS since May 1997. [112995]

Yvette Cooper: This information is not collected centrally. However, the issue of vaccine usage, including wastage, is the subject of a review currently being conducted, commissioned by the Department. This study will make recommendations on vaccine storage and usage and on measures to minimise wastage at local level; these recommendations will be issued in due course.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doses of the new meningococcal conjugate vaccine have been discarded because of poor storage or distribution conditions; and what has been the cost to the NHS of discarded doses of the vaccine. [112997]

Yvette Cooper: The information requested is not available centrally.

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many doses of the new meningococcal conjugate vaccine have been issued under the current immunisation programme; and how many children have been immunised. [112996]

Yvette Cooper: By 27 February 2000, 3,301,280 doses of meningococcal Group C conjugate vaccine had been issued for the immunisation of babies, and 2,408,420 doses of vaccine had been issued for the immunisation of schoolchildren aged 15 to 17 years, a total of 5,709,700 doses.

Data on how many children have been immunised so far are not yet available.

Animal Experiments (Product Labelling)

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will introduce legislation to require that all animal and human medicines and vaccines that have been tested on animals should be labelled with such information so as to enable those who oppose the use of animals in medical and veterinary research to make an informed judgment as to whether they should use these products for themselves and their pets. [112625]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 2 March 2000]: All medicines for human and veterinary use must be tested in animals to provide information about their safety before they can be granted a licence. However, the Government are concerned to ensure that research in animals is undertaken only when necessary to fulfil statutory obligations. There is no statutory requirement for the labels to include a statement to this effect and we have no plans to introduce such a provision.

Acute Services

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the NHS hospitals offering full acute services which have (a) mixed sex wards and (b) shared toilets; and what targets he has set for the NHS to eliminate mixed sex wards. [113152]

Mr. Denham: The data collected on mixed sex hospital accommodation are at health authority level and do not contain detailed information about the position in National Health Service trusts. We have set three specific objectives for the NHS in order to achieve the elimination of mixed sex accommodation:

Ensure that appropriate organisational arrangements are in place to secure good standards of privacy and dignity for hospital patients;

Achieve fully the standard for segregated washing and toilet facilities across the NHS;

Provide safe facilities for patients in hospital who are mentally ill which safeguard their privacy and dignity.

We aim to achieve these objectives fully in 95 per cent. of all health authorities by 2002.

The results of a monitoring exercise published in August 1999 showed that 93 per cent. of health authorities would achieve the objectives by 2002.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospitals providing full acute services have wards which do not reach the HBN 4 minimum stipulation for (a) bed space in multi-bedded wards and (b) ratio of toilets to patients in 24 bed wards. [113158]

Mr. Denham: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Treatments (Leicestershire)

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) in-patients and (b) out-patients were treated in Leicestershire in each year between 1992–93 and the last year for which figures were available. [113167]

Yvette Cooper: The tables show the total number of finished consultant in-patient episodes (FCEs) for patients treated in Leicestershire Health Authority for each year between 1992–93 and 1998–99 (a) and also the total number of outpatient attendances and first outpatient attendances for patients in Leicestershire Health Authority for each of the same years (b).

Table A

Year	Total
1992–93	161,824
1993–94	177,035
1994–95	191,032
1995–96	192,566
1996–97	200,726
1997–98	205,196
1998–99	225,384

Notes:
1. Figures for 1992–93 to 1996–97 are grossed for coverage. 1997–98 and 1998–99 figures are ungrossed.
2. An FCE is defined as a period of patient care under one consultant in one health care provider. The figures do not represent the number of patients, as one person may have several episodes within the year.
3. After 1994–95 District Health Authorities changed to Health Authorities.

"Outpatients and ward attenders for England", a copy of which is placed in the Library, contains information for individual National Health Service trusts along with summary tables for England. The returns are made on a financial year basis and the latest year for which data are available is 1998–99.

£4 million Mental Health Partnership Fund to support innovative service strategies around broader mental health policy initiatives.

£12 million support for education and training for doctors and nurses.

£1 million estimated expenditure on drug treatment.

£17 million estimated expenditure on drug treatments.

Allocations to health authorities are through unified allocations and bidding processes. Allocations to local authorities are hypothecated through the Mental Health Grant.

Money allocated for implementation of the Mental Health National Service Framework across health and social care will be identified thorough Joint Investment Plans and will be robustly scrutinised through performance management systems to ensure full utilisation.

Births Asphyxia

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many payments and interim payments were made for births asphyxia by each NHS trust for (a) 1998–99, (b) 1999–2000, and (c) his estimate for 2000–01; and how much in total was paid out by each trust for this type of claim in (i) 1998–99, (ii) 1999–2000 and (iii) his estimate for 2000–01. [113150]

Ms Stuart: The information requested is not available centrally.

Rat Infestation

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure in each of the last three financial years on controlling and treating rat infestation in (a) hospitals and (b) other NHS premises. [113042]

Yvette Cooper: The Department does not collect this information centrally.

Contraceptive Drugs

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the annual cost to the NHS of paying general practitioners an item of service fee for prescribing emergency contraceptive drugs in each of the years 1990 to 1997. [113165]

Yvette Cooper: General practitioners do not receive an item of service fee for prescribing these drugs.

Cerebral Palsy

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 14 February 2000, Official Report, column 388W, (1) what was the source of his Department's estimate that the risk of cerebral palsy among babies born weighing less than 1,500 grammes is 70 times higher than among babies weighing 2,500 grammes or more at birth; and what was the year and geographical area to which it applies; [113096]

(2) what steps his Department is taking to monitor trends in cerebral palsy in England, in relation to the rate of low birthweight. [113097]

Yvette Cooper: The information was obtained from the National Perinatal Epidemiology Unit, based on figures from population registers of children and young adults with cerebral palsy in the former Mersey, Northern and Oxford Regions, Scotland and Northern Ireland. The risk estimates provided are based on data from babies born in the late 1980s and early 1990s.

Data are not collected centrally on the numbers of children with cerebral palsy.

Births

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 14 February 2000, Official Report, column 387W, what attempts his Department has made to link data from the birth registration system with the data from the Hospital Episode Statistics in order to provide data of the type requested. [113094]

Yvette Cooper: Discussions are currently taking place between officials from the Department and the Office for National Statistics and a pilot study has been proposed to investigate the feasibility of linking data from the Office for National Statistics birth registration records to Hospital Episode Statistics birth records.

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 14 February 2000, Official Report, column 387W, what are the estimated numbers of records in the Hospital Episode Statistics for 1997–98 which relate to a delivery of a baby, the numbers of these which have maternity tails and the numbers of maternity tails which contain the data required; and what steps his Department is taking to ensure that trusts which do not submit complete maternity data do so in the future. [113095]

Yvette Cooper: There are an estimated 601,000 National Health Service hospital delivery records in Hospital Episodes Statistics (HES) for 1997–98, of which some 40,000 are thought to be duplicate records. By definition all HES delivery records have a tail; about 351,000 of the tails contain a valid method of delivery.

It is the responsibility of NHS trusts to ensure that HES data are accurate and complete. To encourage submission of complete and accurate data, the Department is to publish later this year a National Data Quality Indicator, which will include a component to address the coverage of maternity data and, where maternity data are provided, their quality will also be assessed.

Miscarriages

Audrey Wise: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to his answer of 14 February 2000, Official Report, column 387W, what information is recorded by general practitioners on claims submitted to health authorities for fees for giving care to women who have miscarried; and what statistics are derived from this information by (a) health authorities and (b) his Department. [113092]

Yvette Cooper: General practitioners record on fee claim forms the following information relating to miscarriage services: patient name (except in cases for emergency treatment where the doctor decides not to ask for the patient's name) date, expected date of confinement, place of treatment or whether the patient was transferred to hospital, date of discharge from hospital, and date of last service provided by the doctor.

The Department does not routinely collect data on miscarriage statistics from health authorities. Health authorities make their own arrangements for reviewing miscarriage statistics where appropriate.

Foetal Tissue Banks

Mr. Amess: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the foetal tissue banks in the UK. [113496]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 7 March 2000]: The Medical Research Council Foetal Tissue Bank based at the Hammersmith Hospital, London is the main foetal tissue bank in the United Kingdom. The Department is aware of additional banks based at the Institute of Child Health, London and at the University of Newcastle-upon-Tyne.

Smoking

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment he has made of the additional health risk of smoking cigarettes containing (a) calcium carbonate, (b) cellulose fibre, (c) Di-ammonium (d) hydrogen phosphate, (e) ethylene vinyl acetate copolymer, (f) Sorbitol, (g) citric acid and its tripotassium and trisodium salts, (h) menthol, (i) cocoa, (j) sucrose and sucrose syrup, (k) glycerol, (l) liquorice, (m) benzoic acid and/or its potassium salts, (n) caramel, (o) dried extracts and esters of fruits, (p) acetic acid, (q) guar gom, (r) propylene glycol, (s) magnesium oxide, (t) carboxymethyl cellulose, (u) humic acid, (v) triethylene glycol, (w) polyvinyl alcohol, (x) triethylene glycol, (y) methyl hydroxy propyl cellulose, (z) diatomaceous earth, (aa) potassium chloride, (bb) sodium chloride, (cc) cellulose acetate propionate, (dd) glyoxal, (ee) ortho-phosphoric acid and (ff) iron oxide. [113508]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 7 March 2000]: All the substances listed have been assessed as additives to tobacco products (cigarette, cigars, pipe and hand rolling tobacco) using the guidelines detailed in the report of the Scientific Committee on Tobacco and Health (Annex K Appendix 1), copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Austin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what recent discussions he has had with tobacco manufacturers regarding additives used in cigarettes; if he will list those additives known to be used; and if he will make a statement. [113509]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 7 March 2000]: None. Officials meet members of the Tobacco Manufacturers' Association twice a year to monitor the Voluntary Agreement on the approval and use of the additives in tobacco products in the United Kingdom. They have also met, both individually and collectively, tobacco company representatives on an ad hoc basis to discuss additives. The list of additives is available in the Library and on the following website:

www.givingupsmoking.co.uk

Electro-convulsive Treatment

Mr. Drew: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to monitor the use of electro-convulsive treatment following his Department's earlier survey; and if he will make a statement. [113361]

Mr. Hutton [holding answer 7 March 2000]: There are no special plans for future monitoring of electro-convulsive treatment. It is expected that more useful and reliable information on ECT will be obtained from the Mental Health Minimum Data Set which is gradually being implemented across all mental health trusts between now and 2003.

BCG Vaccine

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for how long the BCG vaccine programme in schools in North Essex will remain suspended; and if he will make a statement. [113517]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 7 March 2000]: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. Pickles) on 10 February 2000, Official Report, column 261W.

Mount Vernon Hospital

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will make a statement about the future of cleft lip and palate surgery and treatment at Mount Vernon Hospital, Northwood, Middlesex. [113463]

Mr. Denham [holding answer 7 March 2000]: I understand that following advice from an inter-regional group chaired by Professor John Murray, the National Health Service Executive, London Regional Office and its Regional Specialist Commissioning Group (RSCG) take the view that cleft lip and palate surgery cannot be sustained at Mount Vernon Hospital.

At its meeting of 6 March the RSCG recommended that centres should be designated at Great Ormond Street Hospital in partnership with St. Andrew's Centre Broomfield and Guy's and St. Thomas Hospitals, in partnership with Queen Victoria Hospital, East Grinstead. If these proposals are accepted by the health authorities, following consultation, their implementation will require Mount Vernon services to transfer to another site.

My position as a Minister prevents me from commenting further on these proposals at this stage.

Cleft Lip and Palate Services

Mr. Wilkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) where in London and the south-east of England he has decided that specialist cleft lip and palate surgical facilities will be located; [113464]

(2) which specialist cleft lip and palate surgical and treatment units will be closed in London and south-east England during the next five years. [113594]

Mr. Denham: The National Health Service is presently undertaking a review of cleft lip and palate services following the report of the Clinical Standards Advisory Group published in 1998, copies of which are available in the Library. Decisions on the designation of specialist cleft centres in London and south-east regions are expected shortly.

Harefield Hospital

Mr. Letwin: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans he has to close Harefield Hospital; and if he will make a statement. [113572]

Mr. Denham: The proposals made by the West London Partnership Forum (WLPF) relating to specialist services in West London are not about closure. They are about improving care for patients of the future. The WLPF wishes to do this by bringing together world leading teams from both hospitals in the best possible environment for patients, clinical services and research. There will be full public consultation on the options for specialist services in west London, starting in the summer 2000. My position as Minister prevents me from commenting further on the proposals at this stage.

Residence Orders

Mrs. Spelman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many residence orders are in place for children who might otherwise be looked after; and what plans he has to increase such provision for children and young people for whom adoption is not the right answer. [113040]

Jane Kennedy: I have been asked to reply.

We do not have information about how many residence orders are extant; however in 1998, the latest year for which figures are published, 30,398 residence orders were made.

Residence orders and adoption orders are not necessarily or usually alternative disposals in the same case. Residence orders are often made in cases in which no question of adoption or any form of state intervention arises, for example to determine which parent a child will live with following the breakdown of a marriage. The Government have no plans to increase the number of residence orders; it is for the courts to determine whether the making of a residence order is in the best interests of the child in any particular case.

TREASURY

Investment (Indonesia)

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer for what reason the Inland Revenue designated Indonesia as not being a suitable market in which to invest directly. [112312]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Inland Revenue has a discretionary power to recognise overseas stock exchanges for the general purposes of the Taxes Acts.

Government policy is to consider recognition on application by a foreign exchange. So it does not follow from the fact that an exchange is not recognised that it is considered by the Inland Revenue as unsuitable for investors.

Personal Portfolio Bonds

Mr. Flight: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what factors are taken into account by the Inland Revenue in determining whether an overseas stock market should qualify as eligible for inclusion in personal portfolio bonds. [112313]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The test of whether shares and securities are listed on a recognised exchange is widely used to characterise tax provisions and to determine eligibility for tax reliefs. The test is therefore not related specifically to any one particular provision, like personal portfolio bonds.

Income Tax

Mr. Stunell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the expected change in after-tax income for single-income families with two children who earn (a) £10,000, (b) £20,000, (c) £40,000 and (d) £80,000 of taxable income as a result of the 1p reduction in income tax to be implemented in April. [111573]

Dawn Primarolo: This Government have introduced a range of measures designed to make work pay and to increase support for families with children, including the 10p starting rate of tax, the National Minimum Wage and Working Families Tax Credit. The cut in the basic rate is another of those measures. Families with children will on average be £740 per year better off as a result of measures in the last two budgets.

Receivers

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to allow the off-setting for tax purposes of the expenses incurred by (a) receivers in furtherance of their official duties and (b) the Public Trust officers' fees, if he will allow these costs to be available for off-setting against the gross income of persons, incapable of dealing with their own affairs, who require the assistance of receivers and the Public Trust Office; and if he will make a statement. [113269]

Dawn Primarolo: We have no plans to change the tax treatment of these items.

Youth Unemployment (Worcester)

Mr. Michael J. Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the youth unemployment figures on (a) 1 May 1997 and (b) 1 February 2000 for the following wards within the City of Worcester (i) St. Johns, (ii) St. Clement, (iii) Bedwardine, (iv) Claines, (v) St. Stephen, (vi) St. Barnabas, (vii) St. Martin, (viii) Holy Trinity, (ix) Nunney, (x) St. Peter, (xi) All Saints and (xii) St. Nicholas; and if he will make a statement. [113271]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Michael J. Foster, dated 8 March 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on unemployment in Worcester.

The ONS publishes a monthly count of claimants of unemployment-related benefits. The claimant count consists of all people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance credits at Employment Service local offices. They must declare that they are out of work, capable of, available for and actively seeking work during the week in which the claim is made.

Information on the levels of computerised claims by age for wards can be obtained from the Nomis database at the House of Commons Library. Computerised claims do not include clerical claims which currently make up about one per cent. of the total claimant count. Claimant count statistics for February 2000 will be released on 15 March 2000.

Unemployment Statistics

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for (a) each ward and (b) the total in Shrewsbury and Atcham the number of (i) long-term unemployed, (ii) youth unemployment and (iii) total unemployed for each year since 1992; and if he will make a statement. [113275]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Paul Marsden, dated 8 March 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent parliamentary question on unemployed people in Shrewsbury and Atcham.

The ONS publishes a monthly count of claimants of unemployment-related benefits. The claimant count consists of all people claiming Jobseeker's Allowance or National Insurance credits at Employment Service local offices. They must declare that they are out of work, capable of, available for and actively seeking work during the week in which the claim is made.

Information on the levels of claimant by age and duration (computerised claims only) for wards and parliamentary constituencies can be obtained from the Nomis database at the House of Commons Library. Computerised claims do not include clerical claims which currently make up about one per cent. of the total claimant count.

Israel

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 March 2000, Official Report, columns 266–67W, on how many occasions in the past five years Her Majesty's Customs and Excise has referred to the European Commission instances of goods alleged to have been imported under preference as Made in Israel which were produced in Occupied Territories or elsewhere; on how many occasions in the past five years the European Commission had established the origin of the products in question; in how many of these cases the origin was established as (i) within the internationally recognised borders of Israel, (ii) within the Occupied Territories of the West Bank, Gaza, East Jerusalem or the Golan Heights and (iii) elsewhere; and what was the average time taken by the European Commission to establish the origin of goods referred by the UK Government to the Commission for possible violation of the Protocol on Rules of Origin of the EC Trade Agreement with Israel in the last five years. [113551]

Dawn Primarolo: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise has advised the European Commission in relation to four separate products. They have yet to be made aware of the outcome of any investigations conducted by the European Commission.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 March 2000, Official Report, columns 266–67W, concerning Israel (a) whether he has examined imported goods still held by the consignee to obtain actual evidence of origin, (b) when the imports of wines from (i) the Golan Heights and (ii) the Israeli West Bank settlement of Barkan, were first detected, (c) when details were first passed to the European Commission and (d) whether the Syrian Government have been informed of the detection of imports from Israeli settlements on the Golan Heights. [113417]

Dawn Primarolo: (a) Customs will shortly be visiting a consignee identified as being an importer of dates from Israel. The outcome will be notified to the European Commission.

(b) Information was received on both products in May 1999.

(c) In June 1999.

(d) The Syrian Government have not been informed by HM Customs and Excise.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 1 March 2000, Official Report, columns 266–67W, (a) when the imports of carpets from the Israeli West Bank settlement of Barkan were first detected, (b) when details were first passed to the European Commission, (c) how many consignments of carpets from the area Barkan have been imported into the UK under preferences, (d) what type of goods were described in the details obtained by the European Commission and (e) when he expects the European Commission to make its assessment. [113550]

Dawn Primarolo: (a) November 1999, as a direct result of information received from the European Commission.

(b) December 1999.

(c) 1998—12; 1999—None.

(d) The goods described covered a range of agricultural and industrial products.

(e) There is no indication as to when the European Commission is expected to make an assessment.

Windfall Tax

Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the Windfall Tax Fund has been spent on programmes in Wales to the latest date. [113494]

Mr. Timms: Information on the allocation of the Windfall Tax receipts between the different programmes, as currently estimated, is set out in Table 4.1 of the 1999 Pre Budget Report. Many Windfall Tax funded programmes are demand-led, with expenditure allocated by participant and not by country, region or any other geographical area. For this reason it is not possible to provide a reliable and robust estimate of the amount which has been spent in Wales.

VAT

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to press other EU member states to broaden the experimental arrangement of Council Directive 1999/85/EC (Annex K to Sixth VAT Directive) to provide for the inclusion of repairs to historic and listed buildings. [113562]

Dawn Primarolo: Repairs to historic and listed buildings are already included in the experimental reduced rate if they are dwellings.

Further discussion of the scope of the reduced rate is unlikely until the current experiments have concluded and been fully evaluated. The Commission is due to report at the end of 2002.

Petroleum Products Smuggling

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) vehicles were seized by HM Customs and Excise for alleged smuggling of petroleum products in Northern Ireland and (b) litres of fuel were seized in (i) 1998 and (ii) 1999. [113538]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Customs have made the following seizures of petroleum products in Northern Ireland:

Financial year	Litres of fuel	Vehicles seized
1998–99	584,000	39
1999–2000[1]	915,691	98

[1] April to February

Duchy of Cornwall

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the tax status of the Duchy of Cornwall, with particular reference to the tax exemptions which apply. [112834]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 7 March 2000]: The tax arrangements for the Duchy of Cornwall are set out in the Memorandum of Understanding on Royal Taxation, attached to the Report of the Royal Trustees published on 11 February 1993 (HC 464).

Working Families Tax Credit

Ms Kelly: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the additional cost to the Exchequer of providing the Working Families Tax Credit to couples with children if couples split their total earnings in half and the credit was calculated on each half assuming the 55 per cent. taper started cutting in at (a) £45, (b) £50, (c) £60, (d) £70 and (e) £80. [112475]

Dawn Primarolo: The limitations of the data available to model these changes, and the uncertainty over behavioural effects, are such that reliable estimates are not available in the detail required.

The reply I gave to my hon. Friend on 9 February 2000, Official Report, column 214W, provided a rough indication of the high cost involved in splitting the total earnings of couples in the calculation of Working Families Tax Credits. Lowering the income threshold to the levels specified in the question would reduce the cost but precise estimates which take into account the varying behavioural effects could be provided only at disproportionate costs. As a rough guide, halving the income threshold from the current £90 to £45 per week would still more than double the existing cost of Working Families Tax Credits, before allowing for differential behavioural effects.

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate, for each quintile group ranked by equivalised disposable household income, the percentage of gross income accounted for by the Working Families Tax Credit. [112950]

Dawn Primarolo: The information requested is given in the table.

Quintile by equivalised disposable household income	Estimated percentage of gross income accounted to by the Working Families Tax Credit
Lowest quintile group	3.5
Second	2.2
Third	0.4
Fourth	[1]—
Highest quintile group	[1]—

[1] Sample numbers too small for reliable estimates to be made

The figures assume 100 per cent. take-up of entitlement and will tend to overestimate the proportion of Working Families Tax Credit going to the higher quintiles. It is also known that some of the types of household containing families now eligible for Working Families Tax Credit are under-represented in the survey data used to model these estimates.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many recipients of Working Families Tax Credit are paid at the minimum wage; what proportion this is of total Working Families Tax Credit claimants; how much Working Families Tax Credit is being paid in total to claimants claiming at the minimum wage; and what proportion this is of total Working Families Tax Credit expenditure, all figures for over the latest period for which figures are available and including family credit if applicable; [112756]

(2) how many recipients of the Working Families Tax Credit and the Disabled Person's Tax Credit are paid at rates above the minimum wage; and how many are paid at the minimum wage. [113581]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 2 March 2000]: The information requested is not available. For each employed claimant, the information captured to the computer system is of gross earnings in each relevant pay period, and a single figure of normal hours worked. These two pieces of information therefore have different coverages, and cannot be used to derive an hourly wage for each case.

Inflation

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answer of 21 February 2000, Official Report, column 769W, on inflation, if regional price data have been made available to the European Commission for use in calculating regional GDP per head; and what plans the Chancellor has to instruct the Office for National Statistics to publish regional price and real GDP data for the UK. [113470]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 8 March 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your recent question on whether regional price data have been made available to the European Commission for use in calculating regional GDP per head, and any plans the Chancellor has to instruct the ONS to publish regional price and real GDP data for the UK.

Regional GDP per head is calculated from estimates of regional GDP converted on to a common currency using Purchasing Power Parities (PPPs). The PPPs used in the calculation are based on national average prices and the same average PPP is applied to each region within a country.

The Office for National Statistics has no plans to publish regional price and real GDP data for the UK.

Low-income Households

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many earners in the UK earn less than £60 per week; how many households in the UK contain an earner who earns less than £60 per week; and what changes there have been in these numbers since 1980. [113469]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from Tim Holt to Mr. Matthew Taylor, dated 8 March 2000:

As Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS), I have been asked to reply to your parliamentary question concerning people earning less than £60 per week.

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) is the ONS's major source of labour market data on individuals. It can provide information on the earnings of employees and the number and proportion of employees earning below £60. However, LFS estimates on earnings are only available from winter (December to February) 1992/3. Estimates for the autumn (September to November) quarters of 1993, 1997 and 1999 are given in the table below. The figures are for Great Britain and are not seasonally adjusted.

Employees with gross weekly earnings of less than £60 Great Britain, autumn 1993, 1997 and 1999, not seasonally adjusted

Autumn	000s
1993	2,466
1997	2,254
1999	1,849

Source:
ONS, Labour Force Survey

The LFS has no information available on the number of households containing an earner who earns less than £60 per week.

Estimates from the Family Resources Survey for the period 1997–98 covering Great Britain show that the ratio between the number of households, where at least one earner earns less than £60 a week, and the number of individuals earning less than £60 a week is 96 per cent.

IR35

Mr. Drew: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the maximum amount of (a) national insurance and (b) personal taxation that an individual will pay under the changes caused by the introduction of IR35. [112989]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 3 March 2000]: The amount of personal tax and National Insurance Contributions that a personal service company will have to pay following the introduction of IR35 will depend on individual circumstances. It is not possible to provide estimates of the maximum amounts payable.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the expected net revenue gain from the introduction of IR35; and what assumptions the Government have made as to the number of business closures and the extent of business migration overseas for the purposes of calculating this figure. [112763]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the revenue which will arise from the proposed measure to stop avoidance of tax and National Insurance Contributions using personal service companies were included in the Financial Statement and Budget Report published on Budget Day in March 1999. Information on the assumptions used was included in the Regulatory Impact Assessment on the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill which was published in October 1999.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many contractors operating through personal service companies have moved overseas (a) in each year since 1992 and (b) in the last year for which figures are available; and what is his Department's estimate for each of the next three years. [112764]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Ottaway: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate, broken down by industrial sectors, the extra taxation that the introduction of IR35 will place on contractors operating through personal service companies (a) next year, (b) in 2001–02 and (c) in 2002–03, assuming current levels of tax rates. [112765]

Dawn Primarolo: I regret that it is not possible to provide a breakdown of the tax liability arising from the introduction of IR35 by industrial sector which prevents avoidance of tax and NICs. However, a breakdown of the 50,000 personal service companies that are estimated to be affected by this measure by broad industry group is provided in the Regulatory Impact Assessment on the Welfare Reform and Pensions Bill published in October 1999.

Mr. St.Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the extra revenue which will arise as a result of the introduction of IR35. [112858]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates of the revenue which will arise from the proposed measure to stop avoidance of tax and National Insurance Contributions using personal service companies were included in the Financial Statement and Budget Report published on Budget Day in March 1999.

Mr. St. Aubyn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which sectors of industry benefit most from the rules on national insurance contributions that would be changed under IR35 proposals. [112859]

Dawn Primarolo: All sectors of industry will benefit from the changes we propose. IR35 will prevent avoidance of NIC and right level of tax, allowing us to target support on the real entrepreneurs.

Government Debt

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his answers of 19 January 2000, Official Report, column 516W, on Government debt over the 1975 to 1999 period, what the estimated interest cost of the difference between nominal and gross debt values is; what measures have been undertaken to ensure this will not occur again; and which officials responsible for the debt funding decisions have been disciplined in connection with this matter. [113468]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The answer of 19 January 2000, Official Report, column 516W, on Government debt gave figures for central Government gross debt at (a) nominal and (b) market prices. These are two different valuations of the same debt and so the interest on them would always be the same. The reason for this is that the market values the debt, some of which may have been issued when market conditions for interest rates were different, to reflect current yields. Thus actual interest divided by debt at market valuation is in line with current rates of interest, whereas actual interest divided by nominal debt reflects the mix of historic market conditions when the debt was issued.

Taxation (Spouses)

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on the principle of independent taxation of husband and wife. [113580]

Dawn Primarolo: The Chancellor stated his commitment to the principle of independent taxation of husbands and wives when he gave evidence to the Treasury Committee in March 1999.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Atomic Energy Research

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the budget allocation to atomic energy research made by his Department for each financial year from 1989–90 to 1999–2000; and what is his Department's anticipated expenditure for 2000–01. [113299]

Mrs. Liddell: The budget allocation to Nuclear R&D made by my Department (and by the Department of Energy prior to amalgamation) for each financial year since 1989–90 to 1999–2000, and the anticipated expenditure for 2000–01, is as follows:

Year	£ million
1989–90	163.8
1990–91	126.4
1991–92	93.6
1992–93	85.3
1993–94	76.9
1994–95	28.4
1995–96	21.7
1996–97	21.4
1997–98	17.6
1998–99	14.2
1999–2000	16.8
2000–01	16.8

Petrol

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he collects on the percentage market share of each of the major suppliers of petroleum fuel to petroleum retailers. [113536]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 7 March 2000]: My Department collects and collates data from the individual companies that supply petroleum products into the UK market. However, this information is provided under strict commercial confidentiality constraints, and, as such, data on individual company market shares cannot be published.

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what controls exist to prevent petrol suppliers charging petrol retailers for petrol which has evaporated before delivery. [113531]

Mrs. Liddell [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Evaporative losses occurring between loading petrol from a storage terminal and delivering it to a retail site have been minimised by the use of vapour recovery systems. Under EC Directive 94/63/EC all storage and distribution terminals delivering more than 50,000 tonnes per annum (tpa) of petrol already operate vapour recovery equipment, and all other terminals will have to comply by 2001 or 2004 (depending on the volume of their deliveries). It is estimated that the implementation of vapour recovery has already reduced vapour losses arising from the transportation and delivery of petrol by 98 per cent. since 1996.

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Emergency Towing Vessels

Mr. Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will announce his decision on the provision of emergency towing vessels (tugs) around the UK. [114330]

Mr. Hill: The Maritime and Coastguard Agency (MCA) is announcing today the extension of the contract for the provision of the Emergency Towing Vessel (Tug) Anglia Monarch, to provide emergency cover for the Fair Isle Channel and the Pentland Firth for a further winter period, commencing from October 2000, and the conclusion of an agreement with the French authorities which will ensure all year round emergency tug cover for the Dover straits. A tug review team is now working to review all emergency towing provision around the UK and is expected to report its findings during summer 2000.

Code of Audit Practice

Mr. Linton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps are being taken to replace the Code of Audit Practice which ceases to have effect on 21 July; and if he will make a statement. [114331]

Ms Armstrong: On 2 March the Audit Commission approved a new Code of Audit Practice which it has submitted to my right hon. Friend who has today laid a copy before the House.

It is now for the House to consider the Code and, if it sees fit, to approve it. If approved, the Code will prescribe the way in which auditors in England and Wales must carry out their audits of local government and NHS bodies, and it will also set out auditors' responsibilities in relation to the audit of local government Best Value Performance Plans.

The Code has been prepared under the Audit Commission Act 1998 and the Local Government Act 1999. The Code sets out the general principles to be followed by auditors, and the audit framework within which auditors will carry out their responsibilities. It also sets out auditors' responsibilities in relation to reviews of the financial aspects of corporate governance; the audit of the accounts; and reviews of aspects performance management.

Modern Zoo Practice

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will publish the revised Standards of Modern Zoo Practice. [114356]

Mr. Mullin: I am pleased to announce that I shall be launching the revised standards at Bristol Zoo today. They will come into effect on 3 April 2000.

Regional Policy

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions which Ministers have responsibility for the new unit to co-ordinate the Government's approach to the regions; and how often the ministerial board of the unit will meet. [113153]

Mr. Prescott: Lord Falconer, Minister of State at the Cabinet Office, will have day-to-day responsibility for the Regional Co-ordination Unit reporting to me. Matters relating to the new unit that require collective agreement will be considered by an interdepartmental committee of Ministers, which will meet under my chairmanship when business requires.

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many civil servants have been assigned to the new unit to co-ordinate the Government's approach to the regions. [113156]

Mr. Prescott: A team of three civil servants is currently preparing for the setting up of the core of the Regional Co-ordination Unit on 1 April. Staff will be assigned to the new unit as the implementation plan on the Performance and Innovation Unit report "Reaching Out" progresses.

Domestic Emissions

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement on progress in developing a domestic emissions trading scheme. [113054]

Mr. Meacher: The Government, in their new Draft Climate Change Programme, recognise that carbon emissions trading is a key part of the longer-term solution to greenhouse gas emissions. It will complement other measures in the business sector by offering cost-effective and flexible options for achieving emissions reductions. And an early start to emissions trading in the UK should bring valuable experience and expertise to UK business and to the City of London. This will be particularly important in advance of the international emissions trading scheme envisaged by the Kyoto Protocol, and the European trading scheme put forward in the recent European Commission Green Paper.

The design of a domestic greenhouse gas emissions trading scheme has been taken forward by the business-led UK Emissions Trading Group (ETG), with Government officials working closely alongside. The ETG has made speedy progress in addressing the key issues involved in the design of a domestic emissions trading scheme. Outline proposals for a UK trading scheme were presented to Government in October 1999, and the ETG has recently reported to Government on follow-up work in a number of areas. The group's conclusions have moved the UK significantly along the road to the launch of a domestic trading scheme. But much work on the detail of the scheme remains to be done, and the Government will expect to take this work forward with the Emissions Trading Group.

The Government have also said that firms within climate change levy agreements, who have agreed a target to increase their energy efficiency or reduce their carbon emissions, will be able to use carbon trading as one way of helping them meet their targets. And the Government are currently discussing with members of the Emissions Trading Group and climate change levy agreement sectors the most suitable way for these firms to participate in this trading, and in trading with the wider domestic scheme.

Rural Bus Fund

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list for each of the last five years for which figures are available (a) the total allocation to Shrewsbury and Atcham from the Rural Bus Fund and (b) the number of (i) additional and (ii) improved bus services supported by these grants; and if he will make a statement. [113484]

Mr. Hill: The rural bus subsidy grant is allocated at county council level and it is for each county to decide which services to support. In the first year of the grant, 1998–99, Shropshire county council was allocated £630,354. The same amount has also been allocated to the council for 1999–2000 and 2000–01.

In 1998–99 Shropshire county council used its allocation to fund 46 services, of which 16 served Shrewsbury. Of the total of 46 services, 16 were entirely new and 30 improvements to existing services. We shall be obtaining information on any changes to those figures at the end of the current financial year.

Freight

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions to which specific classes of freight currently predominately transported by road, his policy on moving freight transport from road to rail applies. [113485]

Mr. Hill: The policy of encouraging more freight on rail extends to all classes of freight. Freight grant applications are assessed purely on the basis of environmental benefit of lorry miles saved. The process does not take into account the type of goods proposed to be transported by rail.

North Wales Main Line

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what proposals he has received for an increase in freight traffic on the North Wales main line (a) in general and (b) with reference to traffic between the Republic of Ireland and other member states of the EU. [113636]

Mr. Hill: None.

Rate Relief

Mr. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will make a statement about rate relief for businesses in rural areas. [112248]

Ms Armstrong: Mandatory rate relief of 50 per cent. is available to the sole village shop or post office in a qualifying settlement (one which is in a designated rural area and has a population of fewer than 3,000), provided the property has a rateable value less than £5,000. Local authorities have the discretion to provide additional relief up to 100 per cent. of the rates bill.

Local authorities also have the discretion to provide rate relief of up to 100 per cent. to any other business in a qualifying settlement, which they consider to be of benefit to the community, provided the property concerned has a rateable value less than £10,000.

These rateable value thresholds will be increased to £6,000 and £12,000 respectively on 1 April 2000, when Revaluation takes effect, giving all non-domestic properties in England new rateable values. The thresholds are being increased broadly in line with the overall effects of the revaluation on properties of the size affected, to ensure that no one loses eligibility for rate relief as a result of the general movement in property values.

Rate relief is one of a number of issues affecting rural businesses which will be considered in preparing the forthcoming Rural White Paper.

GM Crops

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what reports he has received regarding commercial cultivation of Novartis genetically modified Bt maize in Germany; and what their implications are for decision-making in the (a) UK and (b) EU. [113617]

Mr. Meacher: I have received no reports regarding commercial cultivation of Novartis genetically modified Bt maize in Germany.

Novartis Bt maize is not and never has been grown in the United Kingdom and Novartis, through the industry body SCIMAC, have given an assurance that there are no plans to do so in the next few years. Therefore any decisions on cultivation in Germany have no implications for the UK.

GLA (Mayoral Candidates)

Ms Buck: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what statutory authority exists for costs to be met by him for expenditure incurred on the provision of a booklet of election addresses by mayoral candidates at the first election of the Greater London Authority. [114329]

Mr. Hill: Pending parliamentary approval of powers in the Representation of the People Bill, urgent expenditure on the preparation and delivery of the booklet, estimated at some £0.4 million in 1999–2000, will be met by repayable advances from the Contingencies Fund. The cost of repaying the advances will be met from within the Department's existing provision.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

School Sports and Community Sports Clubs

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what steps he is taking to promote closer links between school sports activities and local community sports clubs. [113059]

Kate Hoey: The first School Sport Co-ordinators, an initiative being supported by the Lottery Sports Fund, with additional support expected to come from the New Opportunities Fund (NOF), will be in place in September.

Free Television Licences

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will estimate the administrative cost to the BBC of issuing free TV licences to households containing a person aged over 75 years. [112851]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Estimates are currently being prepared and will be incorporated in the Department of Social Security's Departmental Report, which is due for publication following the Budget.

Mr. Swinney: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what advice he has been given on the question of possible breach of EU state aid rules as a result of payments to the BBC in lieu of the revenue lost through giving free TV licences to those aged over 75 years. [112849]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 March 2000]: The Government have taken legal advice on the application of state aid rules to its recently announced policy on free television licences for people aged 75 or over.

NESTA

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport with what assistance the NESTA programme provides for talented young sports people. [112955]

Kate Hoey: The NESTA (National Endowment for Science, Technology and the Arts) programme, created under the National Lottery Act 1998, with £200 million of National Lottery money to invest, exclusively focuses on British creativity and innovation. NESTA's main aims are to nurture talented people to pursue potential and produce services, and to bring the appreciation of science, technology and the arts to the public domain.

While NESTA does not offer support to sporting activities, Sport England's Lottery Fund has created an opportunity to help young people develop their sporting skills and talent, with several million pounds being invested in education based projects. The New Opportunities Fund (NOF) is intended to promote after-school-hours activity with £180 million earmarked across the UK for revenue funding to support after school clubs. NOF has a target of funding 50 per cent. of secondary schools and 25 per cent. of primary schools by 2001 with after-school sports being a major beneficiary. Sport England is now able to solicit applications where it can identify significant need to ensure that young people develop their sporting skills and talent.

Youth Sports Unit

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to set up a youth sports unit within his Department; and if he will make a statement. [112956]

Kate Hoey: The Unit is dedicated to the implementation of young people's sport and activity, from children's play to sport in schools. It works closely with the Department for Education and Employment (DfEE) and other organisations involved in sport and physical education for young people.

British Resorts Association

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport when Ministers from his Department last held discussions with the representatives of the British Resorts Association. [113437]

Janet Anderson: I last met representatives of the British Resorts Association (BRA) when I spoke at their conference on 21 June 1999. I am in regular contact with BRA via their president, my hon. Friend the Member for Blackpool, South (Mr. Marsden), whom I will next be meeting on 13 March. I will also be addressing the BRA conference in Eastbourne this June.

DEFENCE

Hercules

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the specifications for number of crew in cockpit required in contracts placed for the Hercules C130J. [113471]

Dr. Moonie: This is a matter for the Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Sir Robert Walmsley to Mr. Peter Keetch, dated 9 March 2000:

I am replying to your question to the Secretary of State for Defence about the specifications for number of crew required in the cockpit of the C-130J transport aircraft. This matter falls within my area of responsibility as Chief of Defence Procurement and Chief Executive of the Defence Procurement Agency.

The specification for the RAF C-130J states that the cockpit crew shall consist of a pilot and a co-pilot situated in a conventional side-by-side arrangement. In addition the specification calls for an additional crew seat aft of the pilots for the use by a third cockpit crew member should one be required for missions where high crew workload is expected.

Anthrax Vaccines

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what quantities of squalene and mercury are used as preservative and adjuvant in anthrax vaccines used by his Department. [113000]

Mr. Spellar: Squalene is not added to or used in anthrax vaccine used by the Ministry of Defence. Mercury is a component of the preservative Thiomersal which is used in the manufacture of anthrax vaccine. The maximum quantity of mercury allowed under the Department of Health Marketing Authorisation is 1.5 microgrammes per dose and the anthrax vaccine used by the Ministry of Defence does not exceed this limit.

Mozambique

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many military transporters that can carry helicopters are in service; and if he will estimate the journey time for them to travel to Mozambique. [113086]

Mr. Spellar: The only UK military aircraft capable of transporting helicopters is the RAF Hercules C130 of which there are currently 54 in service. A C130 can transport one Puma, two Lynx or two Gazelle per flight. The estimated flying time for a Hercules to fly from the UK to Mozambique is 25 hours. However, the estimated total time to transport a Puma to Mozambique in a Hercules, including dismantling, reassembling and stops to refuel and change crew, is a minimum of four days if relief aircrew are prepositioned along the route and up to six days if relief aircrew are not available.

Miss McIntosh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what recent discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for International Development about humanitarian aid to Mozambique. [113781]

Mr. Hoon: I have discussed the provision of humanitarian aid to Mozambique with my right hon. Friend on a number of occasions since the onset of the crisis. Other Ministers and officials have been in regular contact with DFID throughout.

Force Operating Costs

Mr. Salmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of operating (a) an air defence squadron (43 Squadron), (b) a strike attack squadron (12 Squadron), (c) an offensive support squadron (1 Squadron), (d) a photo-reconnaissance squadron (41 Squadron and 51 Squadron), (e) a maritime reconnaissance squadron (120 Squadron), (f) a transport squadron (24 Squadron), (g) a transport flight (C130), (h) a refuelling squadron, (i) a refuelling flight, (j) a support helicopter squadron (18 Squadron and 33 Squadron), (k) an SAR squadron (202 Squadron), (l) UAS, (m) JEFTS and (n) No. 3 FTS in the last year for which figures are available. [112854]

Mr. Spellar [holding answer 7 March 2000]: We do not account for squadron operating costs in this way. Budgets are broken down to station level only. A station's operating budget would include the costs of personnel, fuel, maintenance and works services, infrastructure, utilities and other overheads, all of which contribute to the proper and effective functioning of squadrons based there. The costs for aircraft maintenance and spares would not be included, as these costs are managed separately on a fleet-wide basis.

SOLICITOR-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Solicitor-General how many pupillages have been offered by the Crown Prosecution Service in the last 12 months. [113420]

The Solicitor-General: The Crown Prosecution Service has not offered any pupillages in the last 12 months. The position is currently under review.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Street Signs

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland further to his answer of 24 January 2000, Official Report, column 6W, on street signs, what is his assessment of the community relations impact of the erection of bilingual street signs in (a) Irish and (b) Ulster Scots; how he will monitor the rise or fall of opposition and support for bilingual signs (i) internally within each tradition and (ii) between different traditions; how many bilingual signs have been erected and if any have subsequently been removed; and if he will issue guidelines to ensure that instances of criminal damage that have a sectarian or racist element are recorded as a distinct category. [111944]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 2 March 2000]: Current research, funded by the Office of the First and Deputy First Minister, will assess the demand for, and attitude towards, the use of Irish in the provision of services, including bilingual signage. Consideration is being given to commissioning similar research on Ulster-Scots. Otherwise, there has been no separate assessment made of the community relations impact of the erection of bilingual street signs.

As the erection of street nameplates is a function of district councils in Northern Ireland, information on the number of bilingual signs erected and on whether any have subsequently been removed, is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Currently, information recorded by the Royal Ulster Constabulary on the motivation of a crime can only be obtained manually. It is intended to introduce, during 2001, an Integrated Crime Information System which will permit the central recording of crime motivation, where this can be determined. The system is presently being designed to record the motive of any crime, be it racial, sectarian, domestic or other designated motive, in line with the Association of Chief Police Officers' guidelines.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Belize

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations the Government have made to Guatamala, in support of the Government of Belize, in relation to the incursion into Belize territory and seizure of officials on 24 February; and what future action is proposed. [113615]

Mr. Battle: Following the detention by the Guatemalan Armed Forces on 24 February of three members of the Belizean Defence Force and a Belizean policeman, the British Ambassador in Guatemala City was instructed to call on the Guatemalan Foreign Ministry. He stressed our hope for an early and amicable resolution. I am pleased to report that the four Belizeans were conditionally released on 3 March. We shall continue to monitor developments closely.

Entry Clearance Times (Indian Sub-continent)

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the waiting time for a person applying for entry clearance for settlement in (a) September 1999, (b) October 1999, (c) November 1999, (d) December 1999, (e) January 2000 and (f) February 2000 for an interview in each queue at each post in the Indian sub-continent; and if he will make a statement. PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council how much Price Waterhouse is being paid to headhunt applicants for the post of chairman of the Appointments Commission. [112817]

Mrs. Beckett: There is no single identifiable cost payable to PricewaterhouseCoopers Executive Search and Selection solely for the "headhunting" of the chairman.

The cost for recruiting the whole Commission will be £52,000 plus expenses and VAT. Advertising costs will be in addition to this.

Parliamentary Counsel

Mr. Kidney: To ask the President of the Council how many hours have been spent by Parliamentary Counsel in preparing (a) Government legislation announced in the Queen's speeches, (b) private members' Bills, (c) Law Commission work and (d) private legislation, and what proportion of Parliamentary Counsel's time was spent on each, in each of the parliamentary sessions (i) 1997–98, (ii) 1998–99 and (iii) 1999–2000 to date. [113349]

Mrs. Beckett: The Parliamentary Counsel Office answers to the Prime Minister, but I am replying to this question since it relates to the Government's legislative programme.

Information is not available on the number of hours spent by Parliamentary Counsel on different types of legislation. However, a reasonable indication of how the Counsel are deployed is given by their location. Counsel at 36 Whitehall work on Government Bills and on Private Members' Bills supported by the Government. Other Counsel are on loan to the Law Commission, to the Inland Revenue's Tax Law Rewrite Project and to the Department of Trade and Industry's Company Law Review.

The following table shows the total number of Counsel in these locations in the 1997–98 and 1998–99 Sessions (as at 1 January) and at present. The figures exclude Scottish and Northern Ireland Parliamentary Counsel.

In the table, part-time Counsel are counted as equivalent to half a full-time Counsel. The split between Government legislation and Private Members' Bills supported by the Government is pro rata the number of pages of each enacted in the Session or, in the case of the 1999–2000 Session, the number of pages enacted to date plus the number of pages, on introduction, of Bills introduced but not yet enacted. A split of work on Government Bills between those in the Queen's Speech and others is not available. Parliamentary Counsel are not involved in drafting Private Bills.

Deployment of Parliamentary Counsel by type of work (numbers of Counsel, full-time equivalents, as at 1 January 1998, 1 January 1999 and at present

Type of legislation	1997–98		1998–99		Session 1999–2000[1]
	Counsel	Percentage	Counsel	Percentage	Counsel	Percentage
Government Bills (est.)	[2]27½	77	[2]24½	73	[2]30	80
Private Members' Bills supported by the Government (est.)	[2]1	3	[2]1½	5	[2]½	1
Sub-total 36 Whitehall	28½	80	26	78	30½	81
Law Commission	4½	13	5	15	4	11
Inland Revenue	2½	7	2½	7	2½	7
DTI	—	—	—	—	½	1
Total	35½	100	33½	100	37½	100

[1] To date
[2] Rounded to the nearest ½

Although there are minor fluctuations from year to year, the figures show that, since the start of the 1997–98 Session, about one-fifth of the Parliamentary Counsel have been engaged on work for the Law Commission, for the Inland Revenue Tax Law Rewrite Project or (since the beginning of this month) for the DTI's Company Law Review. Some four-fifths of Counsel work on the Government's Bills and Private Members' Bills, with on average about 97 per cent. of that work concentrated on the Government's Bills.

HEALTH

Infertility Services

Mr. Harvey: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) when he will receive the third set of guidelines from the Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists on the provision of specialised infertility services; [108122]

(2) what have been the findings of his Department's survey to ascertain the current provision of infertility services; [108123]

(3) if he will make it his policy to ensure that equality of access to infertility services is provided throughout England; [108124]

(4) what guidelines he plans to issue to health authorities on the provision of infertility services. [108125]

Yvette Cooper: The Royal College of Obstetricians and Gynaecologists published its final set of guidelines on the provision of specialised infertility services on 20 January 2000. The Department has copies.

The survey returns are still being analysed. The conclusions will be published shortly.

While the Government have already set their priorities for the National Health Service in the immediate future (cancer, coronary heart disease, mental health) we remain committed to ending the postcode lottery for all services in the National Health Service. We will therefore be working towards greater equity in access to services within available resources over the coming years.

There are no immediate plans to issue guidance to health authorities on infertility services.

BSE

Mr. Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will set out his Department's assessment of the hierarchy, by method of transmission, of likelihood of risk of transmission of BSE. [111897]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 1 March 2000]: In experiments involving strains of prion that have been adapted to laboratory animals, such as mice, it has been shown that intracerebral inoculation is more likely to cause infection than intravenous injection which, in turn, is more likely to cause infection than intra-peritoneal or sub-cutaneous inoculation. Parenteral exposure is, in turn, more likely to cause infection than oral exposure.

Experiments on mice challenged with a strain of scrapie—a Transmissible Spongiform Encephalopathy of sheep—that had been adapted to mice showed that exposure by placing the inoculum directly into the stomach was about 100,000 fold less efficient than by direct inoculation into the brain.

As part of its remit to consider emerging scientific findings the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee (SEAC), the expert Committee that advises the Government on all aspects of TSEs, has considered the results of experiments designed to investigate the link between BSE and variant CJD (vCJD). The Committee has stated that > BSE and vCJD were caused by a closely similar prion strain, and concluded that vCJD was an acquired prion disease caused by exposure to BSE or BSE like agent.

However, these results do not provide information about the route of exposure, and research to establish this factor remains part of the Government's TSE Research Strategy.

Cancer

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Secretary of State for Health What funding there is in the current year for medical activities relating to (a) prostate, (b) breast and (c) testicular cancer; if he will break down each figure into (i) treatment, (ii) prevention, (iii) detection and (iv) research; and if he will make a statement. [112331]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 1 March 2000]: The information on overall spending on cancer is not currently held centrally. Spending on cancer in-patient care is estimated to account for 6.3 per cent. (£1,479 million) of National Health Service hospital expenditure but there is no measure of the additional spending on cancer services not normally provided on an in-patient basis, for example cancer screening, chemotherapy, radiotherapy and community palliative care services. Breast screening for women aged 50–64 is estimated to cost around £37 million per annum. However, information is not available on the annual spend for cancer diagnosis, treatment and prevention for individual cancer tumour types.

Government funding for cancer research is provided through the Medical Research Council (MRC) which receives most of its income via grant-in-aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. The MRC funds medical research as part of the Government's funding of the science and engineering base and is the main agency through which the Government support research on the causes and treatment of disease. The Department also funds research to support policy development in health and social care and manages the NHS research and development budgets.

The Department also provides support for research commissioned by charities and the MRC that takes place in the NHS. Over £63 million per year of this funding supports cancer research, with £16 million going to the Royal Marsden Hospital alone.

Total Government expenditure on cancer research is estimated to be £110 million per annum. This does not include basic biomedical research, which may lead to breakthroughs for cancer treatment.

The latest figures available for annual Government (Department of Health/NHS, MRC and other Government Departments—principally devolved Health Departments) expenditure on breast cancer, prostate cancer and testicular cancer:

	£ million
Breast	9.33
Prostate	1.55
Testicular	0.49

We have recently agreed an additional £1 million for prostate cancer research next year.

These figures underestimate the total expenditure, as detailed estimates of NHS support funding expenditure are not collected routinely.

New research projects are being funded regularly through both the MRC and DH/NHS directly commissioned programmes and priorities for research funding are kept under review.

Tobacco Duty

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what planning assumptions he has made on the basis of the additional revenue which the NHS will receive as a result of hypothecation of increased levels of tobacco duty in 2000–01. [112785]

Yvette Cooper: The allocations to health authorities for 2000–01 take account of the possibility that £250 million will be available to the National Health Service as a result of changes in tobacco duty, in the light of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's Pre-Budget Report speech last November. Decisions about tobacco duty will be announced by the Chancellor in his Budget Speech.

Cerebral Palsy

Helen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the incidence of cerebral palsy per thousand of the population (a) nationally and (b) in the north-west Region for each of the past 10 years. [113661]

Ms Stuart: Data are not collected centrally on the numbers of children in England with cerebral palsy.

Medical Devices Agency

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will publish the key targets for 2000–01 for the Medical Devices Agency. [114357]

Yvette Cooper: We have agreed the agency's key targets for 2000–01 and copies have been placed in the Library.

Medicines Control Agency

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the members of the Medicines Control Agency and the interest each one has in (a) local, (b) national and (c) international drug companies. [113614]

Ms Stuart: The Medicines Control Agency is an executive agency of the Department of Health and is accountable direct to Ministers. It has over 500 staff who are Civil Servants and subject to all the normal Civil Service employment rules, including those on interests in commercial concerns.

PRIME MINISTER

Chest and Heart Services (Wales)

Mr. Denzil Davies: To ask the Prime Minister if his proposals to establish fast track chest pain clinics and a National Heart Director apply in Wales. [113635]

The Prime Minister: The responsibility for health in Wales has been transferred to the National Assembly for Wales.

Government Contracts (Representations)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list the occasions when Heads of foreign Governments have made representations to him relating to the allocation of a particular Government contract; who the Head of Government was in each case; and in each case if the contract allocation was in accord with the representations made. [113065]

The Prime Minister: It is established practice under exemption 1(c) of the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information not to disclose information received in confidence from foreign Governments.

Prior Options Review

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what evaluation he has made of the mechanisms presented in the Prior Options Review for opening up the operation of non-departmental public bodies. [113304]

The Prime Minister: In line with a commitment in the Modernising Government White Paper, we have recently reviewed the entire review process for non-departmental public bodies. We have concluded that the Prior Options stage of the review process should reflect the Government's wider objectives. This includes taking greater account of the views of stakeholders and focusing on delivering services which are of a higher quality, more responsive and better integrated.

CABINET OFFICE

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office (1) if she will make it a requirement for non-departmental public bodies that they should record the matters discussed and agreements reached in meetings held with other NDPBs in the form of minutes; [113302]

(2) what proportion of non-departmental public bodies hold open meetings; [113307]

(3) how many people are board members of non-departmental public bodies in the United Kingdom; broken down between (a) England, (b) Northern Ireland, (c) Scotland and (d) Wales. [113311]

Mr. Stringer: All executive non-departmental public bodies (NDPBs) are encouraged to publish minutes of meetings, either whole or in summary form, and to hold meetings in public. Individual Departments and NDPBs themselves are best placed to determine whether this is appropriate on a case-by-case basis. Information on the number of NDPBs holding open meetings is not held centrally.

There are currently over 30,000 men and women serving on the boards of NDPBs (and their equivalents) across the UK. Information on these office-holders, including information on the numbers serving in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales, is published in "Public Bodies 1999". Copies of "Public Bodies 1999" are available from the libraries of the House.

Public Sector Ombudsman

Dr. Tony Wright: To ask the Minister for the Cabinet Office when the review of public sector ombudsman schemes will be published. [113421]

Mr. Stringer: I expect the report on the review of public sector ombudsman in England to be published by the end of March.

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Global Warming Refrigerants

Mr. Chaytor: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make it his policy to issue advice to local education authorities discouraging against the use of global warming refrigerants, including HFCs, on their estates. [112566]

Jacqui Smith: The Department gives advice to local education authorities and schools in Building Bulletin 83, "Schools Environmental Assessment Method (SEAM)". This recommends specifying refrigerants which do not cause both ozone depletion and global warming.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions steers policy on issues concerning ozone depleting chemicals and greenhouse gases, and the European Union has issued regulations to phase out the use of certain of these, such as CFCs and HCFCs. HFCs are often used as refrigerants in place of CFCs and HCFCs, and I understand that there are not any plans to prohibit their use at present.

Post-16 Curriculum

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list the local education authorities which (a) have and (b) have not made additional funds available to schools for the implementation of the new post-16 curriculum. [113666]

Ms Estelle Morris: This information is not available. Local education authorities are not required to publish budget statements for school funding until 31 March 2000; and in any case such statements identify funding for 16+ pupils only in terms of the factors used for distribution rather than the curriculum components of sixth-form funding.

Education Maintenance Allowance

Mrs. May: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many young people have stayed at school after the age of 16 years in each of the 12 pilot areas for education maintenance allowance since the scheme was introduced; and what the figures were for the comparable period in 1998. [113120]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 6 March 2000]: Comparative data at this level of detail are not yet available for the period of the pilots. However, early indications are promising, with a number of schools and colleges in EMA areas reporting higher post-16 intakes this year.

Dr. Starkey: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what is the estimated cost of extending the Education Maintenance Allowance to the whole of England (a) if everyone eligible applied and (b) if take-up was the same as in the pilot areas. [111715]

Mr. Wicks: Extending the Educational Maintenance Allowance to the whole of England would cost between £670 million and £940 million for an academic year if everybody eligible applied, depending on which model is chosen. However, we would not expect to achieve 100 per cent. take-up, as some young people would continue to choose alternatives to education such as a modern apprenticeship or a job with training.

If take-up is the same as in the pilot areas so far, the cost would be between £440 million and £560 million for an academic year, depending on which model is chosen.

ONE Service (Mentally Ill People)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment (1) if he will make it his policy that people with a mental illness will not be required to attend a ONE interview, if they do not wish to, for a period of three months following discharge from a psychiatric hospital; [113291]

(2) how many people with a mental illness have attended for a voluntary ONE interview across the pilot sites in England; [113292]

(3) if ONE personal advisers will visit places of work to check their suitability for clients with a mental illness prior to placement; [113293]

(4) if the training of personal advisers and start-up personnel involved in the ONE project has involved directly people with a mental illness; and if he will make a statement; [113294]

(5) if clients will have the choice of an interview at home with ONE personal advisers. [113295]

Ms Jowell: ONE puts work, and helping people to overcome barriers to work, at the heart of the benefit system. Everyone of working age making a claim to benefit meets with a Personal Adviser, who works with them to assess their job potential and provides access to a variety of help and information on work, benefit and services. Clients are treated as individuals with their own unique needs, abilities and circumstances, instead of being categorised as "unemployed", "lone parent" or "disabled".

It is entirely reasonable to expect all clients to come in for meetings with a personal adviser as a part of their claim so they can stay in touch with the labour market and be informed about the help and support on offer. We want to treat people as individuals, not to categorise people and make assumptions about whether or not they can work.

The requirements of ONE should be appropriate for all, including people with a mental illness. In developing the policy and the detailed processes, officials have had in-depth discussions with some of the key organisations dealing in mental illness (including MIND and the National Schizophrenia Fellowship) to ensure that ONE enables the groups they represent to participate in a positive way.

All ONE advisers have been trained to work effectively and sensitively with all ONE clients. Those with experience of, or expertise in, mental illness have participated in the training process. Advisers have guidance on working with clients with special needs which has been developed with their help.

Where it is appropriate for people to attend interviews, the ONE process is designed to give them sufficient time to make arrangements and sufficient opportunities to attend. Clients can bring an advocate with them to interview if they wish, and home visits can be offered where appropriate. Personal advisers also have the discretion to waive or defer an interview.

Personal advisers may consult with a Disability Employment Adviser (DEA) and the DEA may accompany the personal adviser on the home visit. If a client has recently stayed in a psychiatric hospital, advisers should certainly consider carefully whether to defer an interview—but should not automatically assume that to be so. For some people the priority may be to sort out the benefits they are entitled to and to ensure their welfare needs are properly identified. Where ONE advisers place clients into work, we have no present plans for personal advisers to visit places of work prior to placement.

Finally, it is not possible to provide the information requested on participation in ONE by people with mental illnesses. Separate statistics on the numbers of people with mental health illness attending ONE meetings are not recorded.

Regional Policy

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment which of his Department's regional initiatives will come under the remit of the new unit to co-ordinate the Government's approach to the regions. [113155]

Mr. Wicks: The work of the Government Offices for the Regions on behalf of DfEE will come under the remit of the interdepartmental unit to co-ordinate the Government's approach to the regions.

School Sports

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment by what means his Department monitors the quality and range of (a) sports teaching and (b) sports provision in schools; and if he will make a statement. [113058]

Jacqui Smith: Ofsted has the remit to monitor the quality and range of all teaching in schools, including PE activities, and to report on the quality and range of provision in schools. Ofsted's 1999 review of primary schools in England found that overall progress in PE is satisfactory or better in 97 per cent. of schools. The review of secondary schools found that in physical education pupils make good progress in most schools in Key Stage 3. The performance of skills and their application in games are usually satisfactory or better.

We have set an aspiration that all schools should provide two hours of curricular or extra-curricular activities a week, and my officials are meeting with DCMS and representatives of PE and sport organisations to discuss ways of promoting that aspiration in schools.

Further Education (Enrolments)

Mr. Boswell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list (a) the total enrolments and (b) the full-time equivalent enrolments in further education in England in each year since 1992. [112118]

Mr. Wicks [holding answer 28 February 2000]: The information requested is shown in the tables.

The decline in headcount numbers in 1998–99 reflects the clampdown on the unacceptable aspects of franchising which grew up under the previous Administration.

The Further Education Funding Council will be consulting on measures to support recruitment in line with our plans, which provide for an increase of 700,000 students in further education by 2002.

Notes:

1. The figures are provided on a whole year basis. Student numbers include Further Education Funding Council (FEFC) funded and non funded students.

2. Table (a):

Student numbers for 1992–93 and 1993–94 are excluded as the available figures are inconsistent with later years.

Student numbers for 1994–95 onwards are from the Individualised Student Record and give the numbers of students enrolling, rather than the total number of qualifications entered.

The figures relate to FE sector colleges and FEFC funded students in External Institutions.

External Institutions did not return data in 1994–95 and are not included in the student numbers for that year. For later years only FEFC funded provision is included.

In line with the normal publishing convention, Specialist Designated Institutions (SDI's) are not included.

FEFC funded HE students in FE sector colleges are included but FE students in HE institutions are excluded.

Three colleges transferred to the HE sector in 1998–99 and are not included in the figures for 1998–99.

3. Table (b):

In line with the normal publishing convention, FTE data include FEFC funded and non funded FE students in FE sector colleges, FEFC funded FE students in External Institutions, Specialist Designated Institutions, Higher Education Institutions and non FEFC funded FE students in adult education centres. Also included are FEFC funded HE students in FE sector colleges.

Outturn FTE figures for 1998–99 are not yet available.

Sure Start

Mr. Dobbin: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will make a statement on the progress of the Sure Start pilots. [111666]

Yvette Cooper: I have been asked to reply.

Of the 60 Sure Start trailblazers that were announced in January 1999, 47 have now received approval and are now starting to help young children and their families. The remaining 13 will follow shortly. In November 1999 we launched the second wave of Sure Start by inviting a further 69 areas to develop local programmes, and these are now drawing up their outline plans. This brings the number of Sure Start programmes so far announced to 129, more than half-way towards the target of 250 by March 2002.

Food Technology (National Curriculum)

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will replace food technology with home economics in the National Curriculum. [111951]

Jacqui Smith: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced in September last year the revised National Curriculum which will apply from September 2000. The revisions were the outcome of a wide-ranging review and consultation which considered, among other matters, how pupils are taught about food, nutrition and textiles in the curriculum.

Within the revised National Curriculum, food technology (including cooking) and textiles remain within the Design and Technology programmes of study; and nutrition and health eating are covered in Science and Personal, Social and Health Education. Home economics also can play a complementary role, and many schools include it within their curriculum. It is also available as a GCSE option.

We are continuing to look at food and cooking in the curriculum with the aim of ensuring a more coherent approach. We will, of course, take into account the role of home economics in this context.

School Sports Links

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what action he is taking to encourage sporting links between private schools and state schools; and if he will make a statement. [113679]

Jacqui Smith: We are keen to encourage links between independent and state schools in all areas, including sport. The Government are currently considering the future role of sport and PE in schools, and part of that will involve developing links that can be made with the independent sector.

There is already good practice in this area including sharing facilities and teaching resources. We will seek to build on that.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

G8 Development Ministers

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how many meetings of the G8 Development Ministers, Ministers in her Department have attended since 1 May 1997, indicating the Minister involved and the date and location of each meeting. [113090]

Mr. Foulkes: Neither the Secretary of State nor myself has attended any meetings of the G8 Development Ministers.

Technical Co-operation

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development how much bilateral aid has been spent on technical co-operation in each of the last 10 years (a) in cash terms and (b) as a proportion of total overseas development aid. [113492]

Mr. Foulkes: Technical Co-operation is defined to include expenditure on personnel, training, scholarships, knowledge and research. DFID's expenditure on Technical Co-operation over the latest 10 years is shown in the table, both in cash terms and as a percentage of the bilateral programme in each year.

Technical co-operation

	£000	As percentage of DFID bilateral programme
1989–90	309,335	31
1990–91	354,568	33
1991–92	412,956	38
1992–93	422,975	37
1993–94	423,811	36
1994–95	430,447	38
1995–96	453,149	40
1996–97	467,682	44
1997–98	496,003	47
1998–99	503,878	43

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what proportion of technical co-operation contracts are awarded to non-UK companies. [113489]

Mr. Foulkes: In the financial year 1998–99 DFID issued just under 3,000 contracts for services with a value of nearly £250 million. Of these 776 contracts with a value of some £14 million were issued by DFID's Overseas Offices to local consultants, i.e. non-UK companies.

Aid Programme

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what assessment she has made of the likely impact on the UK economy of (a) unilaterally, and (b) multilaterally untying the UK's aid programme. [113487]

Mr. Foulkes: Studies have shown that both unilateral and multilateral untying are likely to bring benefits to the UK economy. Multilateral untying will, however, bring greater development benefits. We are working to encourage all Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) member countries to join the OECD's Development Assistance Committee initiative to untie development assistance to the least developed countries.

Management Consultants

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development if she will list the services that management consultants provided to her Department in each of the last 10 years, indicating the remuneration made in each case and the number of person days employed. [113491]

Mr. Foulkes: DFID does not collate this information centrally and it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mozambique

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development when the projected spending plans by her Department in Mozambique for 2000–01 and 2001–02 were first included in a document in the public domain. [113662]

Mr. Foulkes: The plans for Mozambique for 2000–01 and 2001–02 were first published on 30 March 1999 in the Departmental Report 1999.

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development at what time on what date officials in her Department first discussed sending helicopters to Mozambique with the Ministry of Defence. [113663]

Mr. Foulkes: We first asked the Ministry of Defence what military assets were available in the region on Saturday 26 February at 19.30. At that point we were informed that no military assets were available within 3,000 miles.

On Tuesday 29 February at 9:00 we held further discussions regarding the use of UK military helicopters with the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development on what date her Department first requested assistance from the armed services to alleviate hardship in the floods of Mozambique. [113674]

Mr. Foulkes: We first asked the Ministry of Defence what military assets were available in the region on Saturday 26 February. At that point we were informed that no military assets were available within 3,000 miles.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Toilet Facilities

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what access there is to toilet facilities in the House for people who are wheelchair users. [113603]

Sir Sydney Chapman: Specially equipped lavatories for wheelchair users are situated off the Lower Waiting Hall, the Committee Corridor, the Upper Committee Corridor and the Centre Curtain Corridor. The hon. Member may wish to note that there is also a specially equipped lavatory off Peers' lobby.

SCOTLAND

Pay Inequalities

Mr. Sarwar: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what data he has collated on current inequalities in pay between men and women in Scotland; and what measures the Government (a) is taking and (b) plans to take to tackle such inequalities. [111346]

Ms Jowell: I have been asked to reply.

Average pay of full-time employees in Scotland and Great Britain, 1999, is as follows:

	Hourly	Weekly	Annual
Scotland
Women (£)	8.03	298	15,001
Men (£)	9.83	406	21,791
Women's pay as a percentage of men's	82	[1]73	[1]69
Great Britain
Women (£)	8.70	[illegible]	16,481

Other figures on earnings for men and women in Scotland can be found in "Scottish Economic Statistics" which is available in the Library.

We are tackling the gender pay gap across Great Britain through a range of action to ensure women can reach their full potential, including tackling gender stereotyping in career choices; and encouraging them to take up opportunities in the information and communication technology sector. We will also be consulting on changes to Employment Tribunal procedures to speed up and simplify equal pay claims. This builds on action we have already taken to help women combine work and family responsibilities, including the National Childcare Strategy, parental leave and improved maternity leave.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

EU Agrimonetary Compensation

Mr. Simon Thomas: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much European agrimonetary compensation scheme funds have been drawn down to the Exchequer; and if he will make a statement. [112230]

Ms Quin: A total of £397 million in EU-funded agrimonetary compensation has been paid.

Fields

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many fields with uncropped margins in excess of two metres were recorded in 1999, as a proportion of the total number of the integrated administrative and control system fields inspections during the year. [112818]

Ms Quin: Of the total number of fields inspected by MAFF in 1999 under the Integrated Administration and Control System (IACS), it is estimated that just under 4 per cent. involved claims for arable area payments which were paid on the basis of full Ordnance Survey field areas but which, because the field margins were found to be wider than two metres, would only be payable on the basis of actual cropped areas in 2000.

CAP Payments

Mr. Keetch: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the 10 largest recipients of CAP payments made to farms in Herefordshire for the calendar year 1998; and if he will make a statement. [113482]

Ms Quin: Amount received by each of the 10 largest recipients of CAP payments in Herefordshire during the 1998 calendar year were:

£236,601.76
£217,922.74
£191,714.98
£172,860.74
£168,856.75
£144,200.16
£136,475.79
£119,918.47
£115,826.01
£115,646.58

Farmland

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what has been the estimated acreage of farmland taken out of farming in each of the last five years in the United Kingdom. [111988]

Ms Quin: The total area on agricultural holdings in the United Kingdom over the last five years is shown in the table.

thousand hectares

Year	Area	Area difference
1994	17,626	—
1995	17,520	(-)106
1996	17,527	(+)7
1997	17,432	(-)95
1998	17,372	(-)60
1999	17,351	(-)21

Seed Lists

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food for what reasons in the proposed draft Seeds (National Lists of Variations) Regulations 2000 consultation he proposes to abolish statutory measures relating to (a) oral representations at a public hearing, (b) the definition of persons affected, (c) rules of conduct for public hearings and (d) the requirement of fees in respect of such hearing; and replace them with ministerial discretion. [111649]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 February 2000]: The proposed regulations do not abolish statutory rights to make oral representations about proposed decisions on National Listing. The proposal is to transfer the detail of how such rights are exercised from Regulations to the Plant Varieties and Seeds Gazette. It is now more usual to set out such administrative detail separately, rather than include it in legislation. The proposals also provide for all fees associated with National Listing to be set administratively, rather than by regulation, subject to such fees being reasonable. The draft regulatory impact assessment which accompanied the proposals explained that we do not expect them to result in extra costs to industry, citizens or the environment.

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what applications in respect of genetically modified wheat and genetically modified maize (a) have been considered and (b) are currently under consideration in respect of inclusion on the European seed list common register; if such applications will be a matter for joint consideration with the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions; and if he will make a statement. [111412]

Ms Quin: Prior to February 2000, varieties added to a member state's National List could be included on the Agricultural Common Catalogue provided no member state indicated they intended to seek a derogation prohibiting marketing of the variety in their territory. No Genetically Modified varieties of wheat or maize were added to the Agricultural Common Catalogue under these arrangements.

Under new arrangements which came into effect in February 2000, varieties may progress automatically from member states National Lists to the Common Catalogue. For genetically modified plant varieties, this progression requires a marketing consent under Directive 90/220/EEC on the Deliberate Release into the Environment of Genetically Modified Varieties and, where appropriate, an authorisation under the Novel Foods Regulation No. 97/258/EEC. No genetically modified wheat varieties have either been considered or added to the Common Catalogue under these new arrangements. There are currently three genetically modified maize varieties included in member states' National Lists which the EU Commission is considering for inclusion in the Common Catalogue. These are CHARDON LL, included in the Dutch National List, and COMPA CB and JORDI CB, included in the Spanish National List. The decision on whether to add these varieties to the Common Catalogue is for the Commission to determine on the basis of whether the necessary regulatory requirements have been met.

The Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions is not involved in considering whether plant varieties may be added to the Common Catalogue.

Pig Industry

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what recent assessment he has made of the cost of BSE to the pig industry. [111706]

Ms Quin: No official assessment has been made by Government, but industry assessments have been discussed between Government and industry representatives.

Mr. Breed: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations were made to him in January by representatives of the pig industry regarding legal opinion on the feasibility of state aid for the pig sector under European law. [111709]

Ms Quin: My right hon. Friend the Minister received a letter from a group of solicitors acting on behalf of the British Pig Industry Support Group, threatening to bring a Judicial Review of the Minister's failure to grant state aid to the pig sector.

Salmon Freshwater Fisheries

Mr. Ben Chapman: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food when the report of the independent Salmon Freshwater Fisheries Review Group will be published. [114309]

Mr. Morley: I am pleased to announce that the Salmon and Freshwater Fisheries Review Group's report is being published today. The group has carried out a very thorough and wide ranging examination of salmon and freshwater fisheries policy and legislation in England and Wales. We now intend to seek the views of interested parties; the consultation period will run until 31 July 2000. Copies of the report have been placed in the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefit Claims

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many claimants have been denied access to any benefits for each month of (a) 1999 and (b) the current year to date. [110486]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 21 February 2000]: I have been asked to reply.

Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service agency under its Chief Executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Mr. Leigh Lewis to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn dated 9 March 2000:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your question about the number of claimants who have been denied access to any benefits after failing to attend an Employment Service advisory interview. This is something which falls within the responsibilities delegated to me as Chief Executive of the Employment Service.

Information on the numbers and types of decisions given by Employment Service Decision Makers on labour market questions are recorded quarterly rather than monthly, and published in the 'Analysis of Sector Decision Making' (formerly known as the 'Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions'), copies of which are held in the House of Commons Library. The most recent publication is for the quarter ending 30 September 1999.

For each quarter in the calendar year 1999, the numbers of jobseekers whose entitlement to Jobseeker's Allowance ceased as a result of failing to attend an Employment Service advisory interview are as follows:

Quarter ending	Number
31 March 1999	29,335
30 June 1999	31,400
30 September 1999	35,189

Information for the quarter ending December 1999 will be published by 31 March 2000 and lodged with the Library.

I hope this is helpful.

Unclaimed Benefits

Mr. Burgon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the number of people in the Elmet constituency aged over 60 years who are not claiming benefit to which they are entitled. [113416]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available. It is not possible to produce reliable estimates of numbers not claiming their entitlement at constituency level.

Pensions

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the compensation and general levies payable under the Pension Schemes Act 1993 by occupational and personal pension schemes. [114334]

Mr. Rooker: I am pleased to announce that the rate of the Compensation Levy will remain unchanged at a maximum of 23 pence per member for the third year in a row and that it will not be necessary to raise a Compensation Levy in 2000–01.

Regulations are being laid today for the General Levy that will increase rates for most pension schemes from 1 April 2000 with the exception of occupational schemes with 6,604 or more members. Rates for these schemes have been frozen at their present levels for the coming year. The rates for 2000–01 are shown in the table.

The General Levy covers the costs of the bodies that safeguard the rights of pension scheme members or provide them with help, advice and information. These bodies are the Occupational Pensions Regulatory Authority (Opra), the Pensions Ombudsman, the Pensions Advisory Service and the Pension Schemes Registry. It is essential that these bodies have the resources necessary to meet their continuing and new responsibilities so that all scheme members' interests are properly protected.

The increase in the General Levy rates for most, but not all, occupational pension schemes reflects that the biggest schemes generate little work for Opra, and have not contributed to the steady increase in the number of cases referred to them or to the complexity of the issues with which they deal. The new rates for personal pension schemes reflect that Opra's regulatory functions are extended to those schemes and to Stakeholder pension schemes by the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act 1999.

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to consult on draft regulations on employer payments to personal pensions and stakeholder pensions. [114332]

Mr. Rooker: We are today issuing a consultation document containing draft regulations on employer payments to personal pensions and stakeholder pensions.

The new requirements represent a major change for both insurance companies and employers. The consultation document contains a full description of the new arrangements. We want to alert employers and insurance companies now so that they can start planning for the new regime, which we plan to bring into force in April 2001.

An important part of our pension reforms is that people should have greater confidence in private pensions. Regulations require deductions from pay to be paid by employers to occupational pension schemes within set deadlines. Today's draft regulations extend this requirement to personal pensions and stakeholder pensions.

Incapacity Benefit

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what changes he plans to make to the all work test in Incapacity Benefits. [114333]

Mr. Bayley: We are laying regulations today which, together with regulations made in November (The Social Security (Incapacity for Work) Miscellaneous Amendments Regulations 1999), give effect to the changes to the All Work Test which were introduced by the Welfare Reform and Pensions Act.

The All Work Test provides an assessment of the effect of a person's medical condition on their functional abilities, to determine whether they reach the threshold at which it is appropriate to pay incapacity benefits rather than to treat them as unemployed. It is a negative test in that it currently looks only at people's incapacities and not at why they are able to do despite their illness or disability. The very name gives the wrong impression that people who reach the benefit threshold are unfit to do any work. But many sick and disabled people already work, and many more want to and may be able to, given the right encouragement and support.

From 3 April 2000 the All Work Test will be replaced by the Personal Capability Assessment. The threshold for entitlement to incapacity benefits, and the way that incapacity is assessed will not change in any way. But the doctor who advises the decision maker will also be able to prepare a Capability Report, with positive and constructive advice on what the person can do despite their incapacity and on measures such as workplace adaptations which might help them to work. This report will not be seen by the benefit decision maker but will go to Personal Advisers, to help them and their clients plan a return to employment.

As part of the ONE pilots, our doctors are already providing Capability Reports in appropriate cases. The process was trialled successfully last summer. We aim to extend the use of Capability Reports as we gain experience through the pilots and as Personal Adviser services are expanded.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the pilot areas for enhanced medical assessment for incapacity benefits in respect of incapability information; and on what basis they were selected. [113046]

Mr. Bayley: From 3 April, the All Work Test for incapacity benefits will be replaced by the Personal Capability Assessment. This will continue to determine benefit entitlement in exactly the same way as now but will also allow the doctor who assesses a person's incapacity to prepare a separate Capability Report with positive information on what they can do despite their medical condition and on measures such as workplace adaptations that might enable them to return to employment.

Capability Reports will not be seen by benefit decision-makers. They are intended to assist Personal Advisers in providing advice and support to people who want to plan a return to work. Some initial trialling of the Capability Report was undertaken for a short period last summer in Bolton, and in Bristol, East and Bath, two of the areas in which Personal Adviser services are being piloted as part of the New Deal for Disabled People. Since last November, the new procedure has been included in the 12 ONE service pilots. The ONE pilot areas were selected on the basis of a number of criteria including the need to cover a range of geographical and labour market conditions so as to minimise bias and enable results to be extrapolated nationally.

The areas are:

Clyde Coast and Renfrew
Lea Roding
South Essex
Warwickshire
Calderdale & Kirklees
Gwent Borders
Buckinghamshire
Somerset
Leeds
Suffolk
North Nottinghamshire
North Cheshire.

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when payments will be made to those people under the age of 65 years entitled to receive winter fuel payments. [112656]

Angela Eagle: Following the European Court's judgment in the Taylor case, we have decided that help through Winter Fuel Payments will be extended to everyone aged 60 or over, regardless of whether they are receiving a pension or another qualifying benefit.

We accept the judgment of the Court and intend to comply by equalising the age of the Winter Fuel Payment entitlement to men and women at age 60.

The Winter Fuel Payment qualifying age will be increased in line with the increases previously announced in respect of the State Retirement Pension (between April 2010 and April 2020 State pension age for women will be increased in stages until both men and women share a State pension age of 65).

We intend to make retrospective payments to all people now included within the scope of the scheme in respect of the previous three winters (1997–98, 1998–99 and 1999–2000).

We are carefully considering what arrangements need to be made in order to issue payments securely to customers not already in the scope of the existing scheme. An announcement outlining the full details of how and when these payments will be made will be announced as soon as possible.

Asbestos-related Diseases

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many workers and former workers in the power industry received awards for asbestos-related diseases in the last year for which figures are available; and how many deaths from asbestos-related diseases occurred in this sector for the same period. [113330]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Awards of industrial injuries disablement benefit for asbestos related prescribed diseases in the generation, production and distribution of electricity

Period	Number
January to September 1999	50
January to December 1998	57

Notes:
1. The following prescribed diseases have been used when identifying asbestos related diseases:
D1—Pneumoconiosis (in the asbestos industry).
D3—Diffuse mesothelioma.
D8—Primary carcinoma of the lung with accompanying evidence of i or both (a) asbestosis (b) unilateral or bilateral diffuse pleural thickening.
D9—Unilateral or bilateral diffuse pleural thickening.

2. D1 and D3 are paid from 1 per cent. disablement, and D8 and D9 are paid from 14 per cent. disablement.
3. Figures are based on the Standard Industrial Classification (SIC) of economic activities 1992 and the following has been used:
40.10—Production and distribution of electricity; Electricity generation.
4. These figures are based on a 100 per cent. count of Industrial Injuries Disablement Benefit initial assessments.
5. Figures for 1999 are for nine months only. December 1999 quarterly figures are not yet available.
6. The number of deaths related to this sector resulting from asbestos-related prescribed diseases is not available.

Verification Framework

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what has been the average cost to local authorities since April 1999 of implementing the Verification Framework; and how much of that cost has been met by (a) central Government and (b) local government since April 1999. [113625]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the form requested. The cost of implementing the Verification Framework (VF) will vary according to the size and nature of each local authority's caseload, and the extent to which they already have systems required under the VF in place.

The funds the Department makes available to local authorities are distributed on the same basis as they receive their main administration subsidy. We expect to pay over £29 million in total to 229 local authorities for the Verification Framework during 1999–2000. Some authorities will have received set-up costs, some will have received continuing costs and some will have received both set-up and continuing costs.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent examination of the performance of housing benefit delivery in the London Borough of Islington he has undertaken. [113673]

Angela Eagle: As part of our determination to drive up the standards of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit administration, we have asked the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate to inspect the 30 local authorities which spend most on these benefits. The London Borough of Islington is included among these authorities and will be inspected this summer.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what will be the margin of error of the estimate of housing benefit (a) fraud and (b) error to be provided by the on going Area Benefit Review. [113817]

Angela Eagle: The margin of error expressed as a percentage of estimated losses depends to a degree on the amount of fraud and error found in the review: the less found the wider the margin.

The current prediction for the first set of review data covering the period October 1999 to March 2000, is that the margin of error on the estimated value of losses will lie between +/- 10 per cent. and +/- 20 per cent. of those losses. When data for the period October 1999 to September 2000 become available we expect the margin of error to contract.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many local authorities are covered by the Area Benefit Review of Housing Benefit. [113784]

Angela Eagle: 195 Local authorities have volunteered to take part in the Area Benefit Review of Housing Benefit.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what data his Department collates on the time taken to process (a) initial and (b) repeat housing benefit applications for each London borough. [113669]

Angela Eagle: The Department collects data from all local authorities on a quarterly basis in relation to both new and renewal Housing Benefit claims. The data collected for both types of claim includes:

the number of claims determined successful;
the number of claims determined unsuccessful;
the number of these claims ((a) + (b)) determined within 14 days of receipt of all necessary information.

From this April, Best Value performance indicators will be the main yardstick against which local authorities' performance will be judged. The indicators we have set for Housing Benefit delivery include new measures of the average time taken to process new claims and notifications of changes of circumstance, and the percentage of renewal claims processed on time. Local authorities will be required to set challenging targets for improved performance against these indicators year on year.

The Department has made arrangements for data on performance against all the Best Value indicators to be reported periodically by authorities as part of the normal provision of Housing Benefit management information. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State announced to the House on 6 March 2000, Official Report, column 756, his intention to use his statutory powers to compel authorities to provide this information.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many tenants were evicted from (a) local authority, (b) housing association and (c) private rented accommodation in each London borough because of delays in payment of housing benefit in 1999. [113672]

Angela Eagle: The information is not collected centrally.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the average cost, for each London borough, of the administration of housing benefit in the last year for which figures are available. [113670]

Angela Eagle: The information is in the table.

Notes:

1. 1998–99 are the latest figures available.

2. The "average cost" has been calculated as the cost per case using the authority's total expenditure on administration costs and the total Housing Benefit caseload.

3. The total expenditure on administration costs used in the calculations are those reported by the authorities to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions on the RO4 forms. The caseload figures used are the Housing Benefit caseloads supplied by the local authorities on the Management Information Statistics Stats forms 121 and 122. The caseload figures for financial year 1998–99 were calculated by taking an average of the data for the four quarters May 1998 to February 1999.

4. As can be seen from the table, the average cost per case varies considerably between authorities. Different local authorities use different basis to calculate the administration costs they report. The reasons for the differences include the different mix of caseload the authorities have and their relative complexities to administer, and also the different components included in the total administration costs expenditure, for example, the treatment of overheads.

The information is as supplied on the RO4 forms to the Department of the Environment, Transport and the Regions by the local authorities.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if remote access terminals are being installed with software that will automatically cross reference details of claimants of housing benefit with other benefits. [113624]

Angela Eagle: Remote Access Terminals are currently used by LAs to access a range of the DSS held information which is relevant to the administration of Housing and Council Tax benefit. Although there are no plans in place to install software for the purpose described, the Housing Benefit Matching Service performs a similar function. This quarterly operation cross references a range of DSS held data with data provided by the LAs. The results are then used to identify potential fraud and error.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security which local authorities, in each of the past three years, have been served with improvement notices on the administration of housing benefit. [113671]

Angela Eagle: The Secretary of State has powers under section 139D of the Social Security Administration Act 1992 to direct an Authority as to the standards which it is to attain, in the prevention and detection of fraud relating to Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit or otherwise in the administration of benefits. To date, we have not issued any such directions.

However, as my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State announced in the House on 6 March 2000, Official Report, column 756, we have warned councils that where investigation by the Benefit Fraud Inspectorate identify persistent failings, we will use our statutory powers to direct standards and timescales for improving performance.

Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the margin of error for the inspection of fraud and error in each of the benefits inspected in the most recently published Area Benefit Review. [113629]

Mr. Rooker: There is 95 per cent. confidence that the true figures for fraud and error for Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance in the most recently published Area Benefit Review report are within 8 per cent. of the estimates.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what steps he is taking to (i) measure accurately and (ii) reduce fraud and error in (a) invalid care allowance, (b) disability living allowance and (c) incapacity benefit; [113795]

(2) what was the monetary value of (i) official error, (ii) customer error, (iii) confirmed claimant fraud, (iv) high suspicion claimant fraud, (v) low suspicion claimant fraud, (vi) confirmed official fraud, (vii) high suspicion official fraud, (viii) low suspicion official fraud for (a) invalid care allowance, (b) disability living allowance and (c) incapacity benefit for each of the past three years. [113794]

Mr. Rooker: The results of national benefit reviews carried out on Invalid Care Allowance (ICA) and Disability Living Allowance (DLA) were published in July 1996 and February 1997 respectively. These are the latest figures for fraud and error in these benefits and the reports are in the Library.

We plan to conduct a national benefit review of Incapacity Benefit later this year.

There are security checks in place in these benefits to make sure that tackling fraud and error is an integral part of their administration. In addition there are a number of initiatives to promote greater security and accuracy in these benefits. Examples include:

From April, the ICA payment order book, normally valid for 22 weeks, will be aligned to the length of time for which a qualifying benefit is in payment where that is shorter than 22 weeks.

From April, Automated Credit Transfer will be introduced for ICA customers receiving Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Based).

For DLA, work being undertaken within the Disability Benefits Modernisation Programme which is focused on getting benefit entitlement right at the outset and keeping it right from first to final payment.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) which ministers are currently in the Ministerial counter-fraud group; [113620]

(2) how many times the Ministerial counter-fraud group (a) has met since it was formed and (b) met in 1999. [113621]

Mr. Rooker: Information relating to the proceedings of Cabinet or Cabinet Committees is not made public under exemption 2 of the Code of Practice on Access to Government.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what evaluations his Department has conducted of the use of biometric data as a means by which to reduce benefit fraud. [113793]

Mr. Rooker: This Department already makes use of biometric data in certain exceptional circumstances. The War Pensions Agency use fingerprinting in overseas cases where they suspect that a pensioner or widow is no longer alive and a pension is still in payment. The Child Support Agency use DNA testing to confirm paternity, where the alleged non-resident parent has contacted the Agency to dispute that they are the father.

There are problems with biometric technology, such as the absence of 100 per cent. reliable tests to establish whether an individual matches his record in the database. Such failure rates would clearly be unacceptable from a Social Security customer service standpoint. Until we see advances in the biometric technology particularly in terms of reliability, but also in ease of use and cost we must continue to rely on other authentication techniques for bulk day to day business.

We will continue to monitor progress on the reliability of using biometric data to reduce benefit fraud.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what steps his Department is taking to eradicate fraudulent housing benefit claims by landlords. [113792]

Angela Eagle: We have already introduced a range of approaches to tackle landlord fraud which we are continuing to develop;

we are already involved in very successful joint activities between the Benefits Agency (BA), local authorities (LAs) and the police which are getting positive results;

we have given LAs new powers to control direct payments more tightly and recover overpayments more easily, and to require landlords to provide information;

we are involved in matching exercises with Inland Revenue (IR) of landlords and savings;

we have established an agreement with IR to allow BA and LA fraud investigators to ask centrally for tax information on a case by case basis.

We are setting up a new national benefits intelligence unit to co-ordinate and extend intelligence on Social Security fraud, as the basis for both prevention and detection; overhauling and strengthening the capability and professionalism of investigators to tackle organised benefit fraud right across the benefit system. A senior civil servant will be appointed to manage the central organised fraud investigation service and to act as the Head of Profession for all benefit fraud investigators; setting up new arrangements with local authorities to ensure investigations are targeted properly across the Social Security system.

Weekly Benefit Savings Scheme

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what the annual savings were from the weekly benefit savings scheme for each year from 1996 to 1999. [113791]

Mr. Rooker: The information is in the tables.

Security control programme savings

£ million

Financial year	Total weekly benefit savings claimed
1996–97	1,509.0
1997–98	1,918.5
1998–99	1,645.5

Note:
The figures are not comparable, as from April 1998 the WBS claiming criteria was tightened.

Local authority weekly benefit savings (WBS) data for England, Scotland and Wales

Financial year	Total weekly benefit savings claimed
1996–97	293,672,397
1997–98	346,407,498
1998–99	235,679,923

Note:
The figures are not comparable, as from April 1998 the Weekly Benefit Savings claiming criteria for Local Authorities was tightened.

National Insurance

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 17 January 2000, Official Report, column 334W, on National Insurance staff, if he will list the types of automatic security check that prompt a management check. [113665]

Mr. Rooker: The types of security features which trigger management checks are:

where there is an excessive time between receiving access powers and the issue of a new National Insurance Number (NINO); where a NINO is issued and no record of the issuer is held on the central database;
the audit trail and analysis (ATAS) system which detects when there is any unusual activity e.g. a larger than normal volume of NINOs issued.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security, pursuant to his answer of 17 January 2000, Official Report, column 334W, on National Insurance staff, by what criteria the number of staff able to allocate new numbers were reduced. [113664]

Mr. Rooker: The number of staff who had National Insurance number allocation powers were reduced by critically reviewing the existing users and ensuring only those with essential business need were allowed to keep National Insurance number allocation powers, and restricting to a single group of specialists the facility to allocate National Insurance numbers.

Previously staff had various levels of access to the Departmental Central Index, each of which allowed them to carry out a range of activities on Departmental Central Index, such as viewing data, or allocating National Insurance numbers. The number of access levels providing the facility to allocate National Insurance numbers has been reduced, so that the power is not routinely given to staff who do not need it.

Cheque Cashers Association

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of his Department's formal memorandum of understanding with the British Cheque Cashers Association. [113619]

Mr. Rooker: The Memorandum of Understanding between the British Cheque Cashiers Association and the Benefits Agency is still under negotiation at this time. Once the document is finalised a copy will be placed in the Library.

Departmental Programme Protection Fund

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the funding for the Departmental Programme Protection Fund for each year for which it has been budgeted; and what savings (a) it has achieved so far and (b) it is expected to achieve each year to meet the Public Service Agreement targets. [113790]

Mr. Rooker: The Programme Protection Fund consists of money whose main purpose is to safeguard Social Security against fraud and error. The budget for the current financial year was £464 million, the actual level of spending will not be known until after the year ends. Funding for 2000–01 is currently being finalised.

One of the fund's main goals is to ensure the achievement of the Public Service Agreement target, to reduce fraud and error in Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance by 30 per cent. by March 2007, with at least a 10 per cent. reduction by March 2002. We do not yet have figures for this, the first, year in which the fund has been in operation. However, our initial expectations are that we shall achieve a reduction in the rate of overpayments of 1.5 per cent. in 1999–2000, 3.5 per cent. in 2000–01 and 5 per cent. in 2001–02. We shall reconsider these figures in the light of performance in the first year.

Tax Credits (Remote Access Terminals)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if local authorities will be able to access information held by the Inland Revenue on each of the tax credits using remote access terminals. [113622]

Angela Eagle: Remote Access Terminals are currently used by LAs to access a range of DSS held information relating to claims for Income Support and Jobseeker's Allowance which is relevant to the administration of Housing and Council Tax benefit. We are currently exploring the implications of extending the range of available information to include details relating to other benefits and tailored access to the Departmental Central Index.

We anticipate being able to start implementing these enhancements within the next financial year. There are no plans at present to extend this level to access to include Inland Revenue systems.

The Inland Revenue do not currently have Remote Access Terminals for local authorities to access tax credits information. However, they do operate several dedicated helplines to provide local authorities with information about tax credits.

Benefit Uptake

Mr. Ennis: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the number of people in Barnsley, East and Mexborough aged over 60 years who are not claiming benefits to which they are entitled. [112979]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available. It is not possible to produce reliable estimates of numbers not claiming their entitlement at constituency level.

Vaccine Damage Payment Scheme

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what further progress has been made on the establishment of a fund to assist those eligible under the vaccine damage payment scheme; and if he will make a statement. [113044]

Mrs. Dean: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what progress has been made with establishing a fund to compensate vaccine-damaged children. [113418]

Mr. Bayley: We are examining the feasibility of setting up a fund to provide help to people who have received vaccine damage payments.

TREASURY

Aggregates Tax

14. Mr. David Heath: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his proposals for an aggregates tax. [112229]

Mr. Timms: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer has received a number of representations from a range of organisations about the Government's proposals for an aggregates tax.

Climate Change Levy

15. Dr. Iddon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received since his pre-Budget report on the climate change levy. [112231]

16. Mr. Gill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received regarding the proposed climate change levy; and if he will make a statement. [112232]

Mr. Timms: The refinements to the design of the climate change levy announced in the November 1999 Pre-Budget Report will increase its environmental effectiveness, whilst protecting the competitiveness of UK firms. The changes made were widely welcomed by both business leaders and environmental groups.

Small Businesses

17. Ms Keeble: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact tax changes since May 1997 have had on small businesses. [112233]

Mr. Timms: The effects of the tax announcements are shown in the relevant tables of the Red Book. A number of these measures are of particular benefit to small businesses.

Employment Trends

18. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on employment trends since May 1997. [112234]

Miss Melanie Johnson: Since May 1997 employment has increased by over 800,000 and there are now more people in work than ever before.

BT

19. Mr. Fallon: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received on his speech on BT charging and access to the internet. [112235]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor receives numerous representations on a wide range of issues.

Enterprise Culture

20. Mr. Clapham: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will ensure that his policy in respect of the United Kingdom's enterprise culture, described in his recent speech in New York, takes account of the needs of the labour force; and if he will make a statement. [112236]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government's productivity agenda takes full account of the needs of the labour market through the New Deal funded from the Windfall Tax and through investing an extra £19 billion over three years, both to increase standards in schools and to encourage life-long learning.

Low Pay

22. Mr. Michael Jabez Foster: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he has taken to increase the take-home pay of those in low-paid work. [112238]

32. Mr. Reed: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures he is taking to increase the level of take-home pay for low-paid workers in the east midlands. [112250]

Dawn Primarolo: The Government are committed to creating employment opportunities for all.

A key element of this strategy is the commitment to making work pay, and creating a fairer system for all low-paid workers. The key measures are:

The National Minimum Wage, which was introduced in April 1999 and has boosted the hourly wage of over 1.5 million low-paid workers. The adult rate will be increased from £3.60 per hour to £3.70 per hour from October 2000, while the youth rate will be increased from £3.00 per hour to £3.20 per hour from June 2000;

The 10p rate of income tax from April 1999, which has halved the marginal tax rate for 2.3 million people, of whom 1.7 million are low-paid. Those on the lowest taxable incomes have gained up to £2.88 a week, compared to £1.15 a week for basic rate taxpayers;

Reforms to National Insurance Contributions which will remove around one million low-paid people from national insurance, while protecting their benefit entitlement;

The cut in the basic rate to 22p, from April 2000;

For families with children, the Working Families Tax Credit, which guarantees a minimum income of £200 a week for a family with someone in full-time employment—£80 a week more than a couple would receive on Income Support.

Telecommunications

23. Mr. Loughton: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent discussions he has held with the telecommunications industry. [112239]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Chancellor regularly meets people from a wide range of industries.

Future Spending

24. Mr. Skinner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what representations he has received concerning future spending levels in relation to his forthcoming Budget; and if he will make a statement. [112240]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Treasury Ministers have received representations from a number of organisations in relation to the forthcoming Budget.

Taxation

25. Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much tax will be payable in the period 1997–98 to 2001–02 as a result of his Budget measures to date. [112241]

Dawn Primarolo: Details of the Budget measures can be found in relevant tables of the July 1997, March 1998 and March 1999 Red Book. As a result of these Budgets, the direct tax rate on an average family with children will fall below 20 per cent. for the first time since 1979, and be at its lowest level since 1972.

Mr. Waterson: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer during which quarters since May 1997 the level of tax taken by Government have fallen as a proportion of GDP. [112228]

Mr. Andrew Smith: As a result of the last Budget, the tax/GDP ratio is lower this year than last year. The tax ratio in the two following years will also be lower than last year. Under the last Government's plans these rates would have been higher than the latest projections, not only in this year and both of the next two years.

Mr. Blunt: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much extra tax will be paid in 2000–01 as a result of measures announced in his Budgets to date. [112226]

Mr. Andrew Smith: All changes to the tax system are included in the relevant Budget reports, which are publicly available. As a result of these Budgets, the direct tax rate on an average family with children will fall below 20 per cent. for the first time since 1979, and be at its lowest level since 1972.

Inflation

26. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer in how many months since the power to set interest rates was transferred to the Bank of England, Britain's inflation rate has (a) exceeded and (b) fallen below the median range of its inflation target. [112243]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Government's inflation target since May, 1997 has been 2.5 per cent. for RPIX inflation. In the 33 months since operational independence was given to the Bank, inflation has exceeded the target on 16 occasions, has fallen below on 11 occasions and been exactly on target on 6 occasions. RPIX inflation has averaged 2.5 per cent. during this period and has been in the range of 2.1 to 3.2 per cent.

Film Industry

27. Ms Ward: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the efficacy of his tax relief measures to support the film industry; and if he will make a statement. [112244]

Dawn Primarolo: We are continuing to assess the effectiveness of the tax measures introduced in 1997 and indications are that they are working well. It would of course be improper for me to anticipate what may or may not be in my right hon. Friend the Chancellor's Budget.

Market-sensitive Announcements

28. Mr. Ruffley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what his policy is on the making of announcements which are market sensitive. [112245]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Treasury has well-established procedures which allow us to advance policy while taking account of any potential market sensitivity.

VAT (House Renovations)

29. Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the impact of VAT on house renovations. [112246]

Dawn Primarolo: Statistics on renovated dwellings and on the VAT relating to such work are not directly available.

Based on data published in Housing and Construction Statistics 1988–98, VAT charged in 1998 in respect of repairs, maintenance and improvements carried out by contractors on private sector housing in Great Britain is estimated at £1.7 billion. It is not possible to identify renovations separately.

Contingency Fund (Kosovo)

30. Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the latest costs to the contingency fund of (a) civil and (b) military actions in Kosovo. [112247]

Mr. Andrew Smith: No advances from the Contingencies Fund have been made to Departments in respect of military or civil actions in Kosovo. There have however in the course of the current financial year been allocations from the Reserve of £396 million in respect of military operations and £154 million in respect of peacekeeping, humanitarian and refugee programmes.

Interest Rates

31. Mr. Butterfill: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his objective to harmonize Sterling interest rates with those of the euro-zone. [112249]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The Monetary Policy Committee sets UK interest rates at the level it considers necessary, in its best collective judgment, to keep inflation on track to meet the Government's inflation target. Similarly, the European Central Bank set interest rates to achieve their objective of maintaining price stability in the euro-area.

Public Finances

33. Mr. Goggins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the net effect on public finances arising from changes in the rate of employment since May 1997. [112251]

Mr. Andrew Smith: Employment has increased by over 800,000 since the last election, and there are now more people in work than ever before. While higher employment improves the public finances by raising revenue and reducing social security payments, it is difficult to identify the precise effect of changes in the rate of employment on the public finances, as this depends on a large number of factors. None the less, a higher rate of sustainable employment has been an important contributory factor to the substantial improvement seen in the public finances since May 1997.

EU Trade

Mr. Derek Twigg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimate he has made of the number of United Kingdom jobs dependent on trade with the European Union. [112237]

Miss Melanie Johnson: It is estimated that up to 3½ million jobs in the UK are linked, directly and indirectly, to the exports of goods and services to the European Union from the UK.

Working Families Tax Credit

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the cost of including within the working families tax credit an additional £32 per week if the claimant is 18 or over and is married; and what would be the cost if this additional credit was also extended to claimants who are not married but living with someone as though they are married to that person. [112807]

Dawn Primarolo: Within the Working Families Tax Credit (WFTC), both those couples who are married and those living together as if they are married are treated alike. It is therefore not possible to provide separate estimates for the two groups.

Based on the full year cost of the WFTC, the cost of including an additional £32 per week within the credits for all couples already in receipt of WFTC would be about £1.3 billion. In addition, there will be couples who previously did not qualify on income grounds who will become eligible because of the additional credit. It is not possible to estimate the additional costs arising from this and other behavioural effects, except at disproportionate cost.

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Chope: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he last met representatives of low cost airlines to discuss air passenger duty. [112216]

Mr. Timms: I have recently had various discussions about air passenger duty with representatives from a wide range of organisations within the airline industry, including EasyJet.

Sterling

Dr. Desmond Turner: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will take steps to help reduce the level of sterling. [112223]

Mr. Andrew Smith: The Government want a stable and competitive pound over the medium term that is consistent with price stability, but does not have a target for the exchange rate. The best contribution the Government can make, consistent with this objective, is to maintain sound public finances and low inflation.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Global Cultural Diversity Congress

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 379W, if he was informed before the Commission for Racial Equality's meeting on 7 February that additional funding had been promised to Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd by his Department; if he or any of his Ministers authorised such funding or promises of funding; and if he will make a statement. [113800]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I do not accept that a promise was made to provide additional funding.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 March 2000, Official Report, column 288W, concerning the Global Cultural Diversity Congress, if he will make a statement on the timescale for the review to be conducted by the Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality which he announced on 22 February. [113803]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: The timetable is still under discussion with Gurbux Singh. It will be announced shortly.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 1 March 2000, Official Report, column 288W, concerning the Global Cultural Diversity Congress, if he will place the full text of the report by the Chairman of the Commission for Racial Equality in the Library when it is available, along with the key findings of the report. [113802]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: I refer to the reply given to my hon. Friend, the Member for Hendon (Mr. Dismore) by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary on 6 March 2000, Official Report, column 548W.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answers of 2 March 2000, Official Report, columns 378–83W, if he had been informed of (a) the involvement of Mr. Hugh Harris with Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. and (b) the fact that additional funding for Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd. was to be discussed at the Commission for Racial Equality's meeting on 7 February, when he appointed Mr. Harris as acting Chairman of the Commission of Racial Equality on 7 February; and if he will make a statement. [113804]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary, was aware that Hugh Harris was a member of the Board of Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd at the time of his appointment, but did not become aware until later of all the issues that led my right hon. Friend, to decide that substantial public funds could not be justified to support the Congress.

My right hon. Friend was also aware that additional funding for Global Cultural Diversity Congress 2000 Ltd was to be discussed at the Commission for Racial Equality's meeting on 7 February.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the organisations which have agreed to provide accommodation on contract to the National Asylum Seekers Support Agency. [113785]

Mrs. Roche: We are currently concluding negotiations with accommodation providers prior to awarding contracts very shortly. In the meantime, information about those providers, including their identities, must be treated as commercially confidential.

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer of 6 March 2000, Official Report, columns 556–58W, to the hon. Member for South Thanet (Dr. Ladyman) what additional funding will be provided to local authorities supporting asylum seekers after 1 April. [113797]

Mrs. Roche: The Home Office has a provisional allocation of £300 million to meet the costs of supporting asylum seekers in 2000–01. The cost of supporting asylum seekers is sensitive to a wide range of factors, including the level of applications, the rate for take-up of support and the speed with which applications are processed. We are continuing to work with local authorities and others to determine an accurate estimate of costs and consider the most suitable method of reimbursement.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many units of accommodation for asylum seekers after 1 April he has asked the National Asylum Seekers Support Agency to secure; how many such units of accommodation have been secured so far; and if he will make a statement. [113788]

Mrs. Roche: We intend to have enough accommodation from 3 April to take destitute port asylum applicants on to the new support arrangements. We aim to build up numbers fairly swiftly from there on to be able to bring in-country applicants on to the arrangements as soon as possible.

We expect to conclude supplier negotiations and award contracts very shortly.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what estimate he has made of his Department's expenditure on asylum seeker support in (a) 2000–01 and (b) 2001–02; [113787]

(2) what estimate he has made of the amount of money his Department will pay to local authorities in 2000–01 to reimburse them for the costs of supporting asylum seekers who claim asylum on or after 1 April. [113789]

Mrs. Roche: The Home Office has provisional allocations of £300 million to meet the costs of supporting asylum seekers in 2000–01 and £250 million in 2001–02.

The cost of supporting asylum seekers is sensitive to a wide range of factors, including the level of applications, the rate for take-up of support and the speed with which applications are processed. We are continuing to work with local authorities and others to determine an accurate estimate of costs and consider the most suitable method of reimbursement.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many claims for asylum have been submitted by people who came into the United Kingdom (a) under the United Nations Humanitarian Evacuation Plan from Kosovo and (b) through organised medical evacuations from Kosovo; and if he will make a statement. [113323]

Mrs. Roche [holding answer 6 March 2000]: Non-Governmental Organisations representing Kosovan Albanians evacuated to the United Kingdom have been asked to direct applications for asylum to a central unit in the Integrated Casework Directorate of the Immigration and Nationality Directorate. These records show two asylum applications to have been made by people who came into the United Kingdom from Kosovo under the United Nations Humanitarian Evacuation Plan, one of which has subsequently been withdrawn, and that none have been made by people who came into the United Kingdom from Kosovo through organised medical evacuations.

Jury Trial

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) of 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 376W, for what reasons he has assumed that 25 per cent. of defendants who would have elected Crown Court trial and whom the magistrates decided to try would appeal against the magistrates' decision; what research he has undertaken into the likelihood of a defendant appealing against the magistrate's decision; and if he will make a statement. [113805]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is not possible to make a precise estimate of the number of defendants who would appeal against the magistrates' decision on mode of trial; we have merely made the cautious assumption that a quarter of defendants would do so. By way of comparison, the percentage of defendants availing themselves of the unfettered right to appeal against summary conviction after a contested trial is about 14 per cent.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) of 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 377W, on which judges will hear appeals from magistrates on mode of trial, if he will list, for each Crown Court centre in England and Wales, the estimated number of appeals to be heard by each resident judge; what discussions he has had with (a) resident judges and (b) senior presiding judges regarding the requirement for resident judges to hear such appeals, and what representations have been made to him; how the requirement for resident judges to hear such appeals relates to his estimate of a hearing within 48 hours; and if he will make a statement. [113809]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Assuming that 25 per cent. of defendants appeal against the magistrates' decision on mode of trial, it is estimated that there will be 3,500 appeals a year, which is on average less than one appeal per week for each of the 78 Crown Court centres. The proposal that these appeals should be heard by the resident judge has already been discussed with the Lord Chief Justice, who further proposed that a deputy should be nominated by the senior presiding judge of the Circuit to provide cover. This will ensure that appeals will be heard within 48 hours.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what estimate he has made of the increased number of committals to the Crown Court for sentence if the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill is enacted. [113806]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Assuming that eight per cent. would be committed for sentence, the number of formerly-electing defendants who under the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill would be convicted in the magistrates' courts and committed for sentence would be 1,050, 160 more than under the original Bill.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what reasons the assumption of the increased number of defendants who would be tried in the magistrates' court rather than the Crown Court changed from 12,000 under the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial)

Bill to 14,000 under the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill; what the basis was for each of those assumptions; and if he will make a statement. [113807]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The estimate that 12,000 formerly-electing defendants would have been tried in the magistrates' courts under the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) Bill was based on the generous assumption that a quarter of such defendants might, through representations, have been able to persuade the magistrates to direct their case to the Crown Court. Since the criteria in the No. 2 Bill are more restrictive, it has been assumed—again generously—that this proportion would be halved.

Press Officers

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) of 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 385W, for what reasons the statistics given on the number of press officers in his Department differed from the statistics given to the Select Committee on Public Administration and published in its report, The Government Information and Communication Service (HC770) in July 1998; and if he will publish statistics comparable to those provided to the Select Committee for the dates requested by the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald; and if he will make a statement. [113801]

Mr. Straw: One difference between the two sets of statistics is that the figures provided to the Select Committee included senior managers, press officers and staff on temporary attachments; whereas the question asked by the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) specifically requested only the number of press officers employed in the Department on certain dates.

The other difference lies in the fact that the figures provided to the Select Committee represented averages of Press Office staff over 12 month periods as opposed to the figures requested by the right hon. Member for a specific series of dates.

In addition, some secondments and attachments are very short term and individuals are not always on the Home Office payroll.
Therefore, it is not possible to supply comparable statistics in the form requested by the hon. Member.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to his answer to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe) of 3 March 2000, Official Report, column 384W, on press officer salaries, on what basis press officers recruited to the news team could have earnings up to and beyond £30,000, as stated in the recruitment document, Just Another Day at the Office; what will be the maximum earnings of press officers recruited to the news team; and if he will make a statement. [113808]

Mr. Straw: As stated in my reply of 3 March, to the right hon. Member for Maidstone and The Weald (Miss Widdecombe), press officers will be largely recruited at Information Officer grade for which the pay band salary is up to £27,709. Press officers working on the news team will be operating on a rota system for which there is an additional shift disturbance allowance amounting to 12.5 per cent. of salary. All press officers, including those on the news team, are expected to join an out of hours duty rota, nights and weekends, for which overtime is paid. There is also a non-pensionable recruitment and retention allowance which can be varied at management's discretion.

For those candidates recruited at the top end of the Information Officer pay scale, which would be dependent on factors such as experience and current salary, annual earnings could therefore be up to and beyond £30,000 as stated in the recruitment document.
Due to the varying hours press officers will work, their individual circumstances on taking up post and the unpredictable amount of overtime which might be payable, it is not possible to give an exact figure for the maximum earnings of a press officer.

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will place in the Library the report by Clear Communications Ltd. which led to the restructuring of his Department's Press Office. [113799]

Mr. Straw: Yes. I will place a copy in the Library today.

Press Office Database

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for what purposes his Department's Press Office Briefing and Research Database is to be used; what information will be stored on it; and if he will place its technical specifications in the Library. [113798]

Mr. Straw: The purpose of the Briefing and Reference Database (BARD) is to improve my Department's capability to handle media inquiries and to enable more effective briefing of Ministers on current and developing Home Office policies. BARD is a central database that stores news releases, speeches, Parliamentary business and basic facts and figures about Home Office business. BARD is currently being piloted and its technical specification will be placed in the Library once the pilot is complete.

Royal Family (Protection)

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many members of the Royal Family currently receive protection from officers of the Royal and Diplomatic Protection Squad; and what is the cost; [113049]

(2) how many officers of the Royal and Diplomatic Protection Squad are assigned to protect members of the Royal Family; [113048]

(3) if he will list those members of the Royal Family who have received protection from officers of the Royal and Diplomatic Protection Squad in the past five years but no longer do so. [113050]

Mr. Straw: We seek to ensure the most effective and efficient protective arrangements for the Royal Family and other public figures in the light of the changing threat from terrorism and other continuing risks. It is our policy not to comment on the details of protection arrangements for individuals, as to do so could compromise their security.

Prisoners

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the reoffending rates of former inmates of (a) private and (b) publicly owned prisons in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [113483]

Mr. Boateng: Since prisoners may move between privately owned and publicly owned prisons on a number of occasions during their sentence, it is not possible to calculate the reoffending rates requested.

Prisons

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what reports he has received from the operators of HMP Blakenhurst and HMP Forest Bank as to the current financial difficulties being experienced by Prison Realty Trust Inc. and Corrections Corporation of America; and what assurances he has obtained that these financial difficulties will have no detrimental effect on the companies currently operating HMP Blakenhurst and HMP Forest Bank and their ability to meet all their respective contractual obligations. [113563]

Mr. Boateng: The Prison Service has received a verbal report from the operator of Blakenhurst prison and Forest Bank prison, UKDS, about the financial issues being faced by Prison Realty Inc. or Corrections Corporation of America. The Service has received adequate written assurance that they will not have a detrimental effect on UKDS and will not affect its ability to meet its contractual obligations.

WALES

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from his Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113978]

Mr. Paul Murphy: None.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which his Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113988]

Mr. Paul Murphy: The Wales Office deals with a variety of newspapers and media bodies, with distribution relying on the subject and content of the specific press release. Furthermore, all media outlets can request press releases. All press releases issued are available on the Wales Office website.

Non-departmental Public Bodies

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales on how many occasions (a) he and (b) his predecessors met with (i) the Chairperson and (ii) the board of non-departmental public bodies in Wales since May 1997; and on how many occasions a press statement was issued on the matters discussed and agreed at the meeting. [113312]

Mr. Paul Murphy: There are currently 14 non-departmental public bodies in Wales sponsored by the National Assembly, but the list of such bodies has changed since May 1997 and the frequency of meetings with the Chairpersons and boards of these organisations varies considerably from one body to another.

The information requested is not held centrally, and because of the factors outlined above, could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Appointments Commission

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Council when she expects to appoint the chairman of the House of Lords Appointments Commission. [112813]

Mrs. Beckett: A five-strong selection panel chaired by the Secretary of the Cabinet, Sir Richard Wilson, and including an independent assessor will determine the final shortlist for both the position of chairman and the positions of independent members; the Prime Minister will then make the formal appointment. The procedure will follow the principles of the Commissioner for Public Appointments.

We hope to have the House of Lords Appointments Commission in place by April. However, these are important appointments and we do not intend the process of making them to be skimped to meet a self-imposed artificial deadline.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the President of the Council for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from her Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113974]

Mrs. Beckett: There were no occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from my Department. No cost was involved.

Mr. Brady: To ask the President of the Council if she will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which her Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113982]

Mrs. Beckett: This question cannot be answered without incurring disproportionate costs.

Press Releases are available to all press via the news distribution service managed by the Central Office of Information and are also available on the Internet. Targeted distribution will rely on the subject and content of the specific press release.

DEFENCE

Anthrax Vaccine

Mr. Hunter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department last (a) purchased and (b) issued for use new supplies of anthrax vaccine. [113001]

Mr. Spellar: The Ministry of Defence last purchased supplies of anthrax vaccine in 1991 from the Centre for Applied Microbiological Research, the sole manufacturer in the UK. No new vaccine has since been supplied. The anthrax vaccine issued from 1993 onwards has had its shelf-life extended by the Medicines Control Agency.

Gulf War Illnesses

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the membership of the Independent Panel on Gulf War Illnesses, including the term of appointment in each case and any changes to the membership; how often it meets; and if he will make a statement. [113958]

Mr. Spellar: The Independent Panel on Vaccines Interactions was established to scrutinise all aspects of proposals for research into the potential adverse effects of interactions between the vaccines and tablets which could have been administered to Service personnel at the time of the Gulf conflict. The Panel is chaired by Professor Donald Davies. The other Panel members are: Professor J. E. Banatvala, Professor P. Beverley, Dr. J. Bird,

Dr. A. Boylston, Dr. P. Fawcett, Professor A. Grossman, Professor Malcolm Hooper, Dr. Ian Kimber, Dr. Norman Jones, Professor Stafford Lightman, Dr. Christopher Martyn, Dr. Elizabeth Miller, Dr. David Ray, Professor E. M. Sedgwick, Professor A. Silman and Dr. Geoffrey Schild.

The Panel has met on four occasions since December 1997. The frequency of the meetings is dictated by the research programme. Professor Davies was appointed chairman in January 1999. Professor Hooper, Dr. Schild and Dr. Kimber have all joined the Panel since the first meeting. Panel members are not appointed for a specific term.

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reason no minutes were taken of the meeting on 29 March 1999 between Professor Hooper and the Independent Panel on Gulf War Illnesses; if he will place copies of the presentations made at the meeting in the Library; and if he will make a statement. [113898]

Mr. Spellar: On the evening of 29 March 1999, the Head of the Gulf Veterans' Medical Assessment Programme gave a presentation on Gulf veterans' illnesses to the Independent Panel, of which Professor Hooper is a member. Only personal notes were used and, as the presentation was informal, no minutes were taken.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which his Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113984]

Dr. Moonie: The information requested is not recorded. All media outlets can request press releases—current or archive—at any time. In addition, all MOD press releases are made available on the Internet. Targeted distribution of press releases relies on the subject and content of the specific press releases.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from his Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113972]

Dr. Moonie: The Ministry of Defence uses the Central Office of Information (COI) News Distribution Service. Until April 1998, we subscribed to their courier service. For the period 2 May 1997 to 31 March 1998 we used the couriers on 240 occasions at a total cost of £9,600 (240 x £40).

From April 1998, MOD has distributed press releases electronically and by fax only, through the COI News Distribution Service. Press releases are also posted on the Internet.

Peat Compost

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 2 March 2000, Official Report, column 325W, on peat compost, what percentage of the compost used in his Department's estate gardens is peat; when use of peat compost will be phased out on his Department's estates; and if he will make a statement. [114144]

Mr. Spellar: The information on what percentage of the compost used in my Department's estate gardens is peat, is not held centrally and can be provided only at disproportionate cost. All indications are, however, that such use of peat is infrequent. My officials are currently assessing the full impact of phasing out the use of peat on the MOD estate and it is anticipated that an action plan will be in place by the summer.

Select Committees

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which Select Committees, other than the Defence Committee, Ministers in his Department have (a) submitted memoranda to and (b) appeared before in the present Parliament. [112402]

Mr. Hoon: In the present Parliament, Defence Ministers have not given evidence to any Select Committee of the House of Commons other than to the Defence Committee inquiring on their own or when acting in partnership with other Select Committees. However, I have just agreed to give oral evidence to the International Development Select Committee as part of that Committee's inquiry into Mozambique.

Memoranda have been submitted by the Department to the Foreign Affairs Committee, Transport Sub-Committee, Agriculture Committee, Treasury Sub-Committee, Environment Sub-Committee, Environmental Audit Committee, the Science and Technology Committee, and the Public Accounts Committee.

PRIME MINISTER

Tuition Fees

Jackie Ballard: To ask the Prime Minister what discussions (a) he and (b) No. 10 policy advisers have had with the Committee of Vice Chancellors on the subject of top-up tuition fees. [113919]

The Prime Minister: None.

Seals

Mr. Howard: To ask the Prime Minister if he will raise the killing of baby seals during his forthcoming discussions with Acting President Putin. [114101]

The Prime Minister: This has been raised with the Russian Ambassador. The Russians are not in breach of any international agreements but are aware of our concern.

INTERNATIONAL DEVELOPMENT

Mozambique

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what additional funding for the years 2000–01 and 2001–02 over and above the bilateral country programme for Mozambique contained in the Departmental report 1999 is to be made available for Mozambique following the recent flooding crisis. [113927]

Mr. Foulkes: In the light of the current major disaster we are reviewing urgently with others the needs of Mozambique, to help restore livelihoods, rehabilitate infrastructure, and maintain economic growth and poverty reduction.

Meanwhile, we have already allocated £20 million for immediate humanitarian assistance and rehabilitation needs, and £10 million is planned for emergency budgetary support to help the Government cope with the immediate crisis.

Local Sourcing

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development what plans she has to use companies in local recipient countries to provide the advice and products necessary for UK aid projects. [113488]

Mr. Foulkes: Far too little attention has been paid to local procurement in the past. Sound local procurement of goods and services gives a substantial development benefit. DFID is taking steps to increase both our use of local resources and our capacity to carry out local procurement effectively. We have recently appointed two procurement advisers with the remit of increasing the use of local consultants in Africa and India. We are increasingly working with our development partners to strengthen their own capacity to undertake procurement competently. Over the last two years the percentage of consultancy services which we purchased locally rose from 5 per cent. to 12 per cent.

Crown Agents

Ms Drown: To ask the Secretary of State for International Development which UK companies received (a) the greatest number and (b) the greatest value of contracts from the Crown Agents in the past three years in respect of their procurement activities on behalf of her Department. [113490]

Mr. Foulkes: From January 1997 to date, the UK suppliers to receive the greatest number of contracts from Crown Agents in respect of their procurement activities on behalf of the Department were:

	Number of contracts
Globe Microsystems	108
Landrover Exports	32
Ko-Ed	29

The UK suppliers to receive the greatest value of contracts were:

Mabey and Johnson	12,578,000
Qualter Hall	4,054,000
KSB Exports Ltd.	3,044,000

ENVIRONMENT, TRANSPORT AND THE REGIONS

Asbestos Removal Companies

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many Health and Safety Executive inspections were made to sites operated by licensed asbestos removal companies in the last year for which figures are available; and how many were found to be breaking the law. [113326]

Mr. Meacher: In 1998–99 HSE's Field Operations Directorate inspected 961 sites. 41 enforcement notices were issued and seven prosecutions taken where inspectors considered that there was a breach of the law.

Railway Inspections

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the Health and Safety Executive's Railway Inspectorate will carry out inspections on services between Shrewsbury and Birmingham; and if he will make a statement. [113272]

Mr. Hill: The Health and Safety Executive's (HMRI) Railway Inspectorate monitors and enforces safety on Britain's railways. Responsibility for the safety, welfare and convenience of passengers rests with railway operators.

The HMRI has a planned inspection programme, including inspections of Central Trains Ltd. The last inspection of the activities of Central Trains, Railtrack and the track maintenance contractor between the Birmingham and Shrewsbury line was on 7 March 2000.

The inspector was generally content with the drivers' competence and the track layout and condition on the Birmingham to Shrewsbury line. HMRI are pursuing some matters with the maintenance contractor regarding the condition of certain sections of track, where drainage appeared to be a problem.

Landfill

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what plans he has to review the distribution of resources generated by the landfill tax; and if he will make a statement. [113290]

Mr. Mullin: Landfill site operators may claim landfill tax credits for voluntary contributions to support specified environmental objectives. As we said in response to the Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs Select Committee's report on the operation of the Landfill Tax, we are discussing with industry the setting of indicative guidelines for the distribution of funds to each objective under the credit scheme, in line with the priorities we set out in our draft waste strategy "A Way with Waste".

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will list those items of (a) special, (b) toxic and (c) liquid wastes that will be excluded from landfill sites when the new directives are introduced in 2005. [113287]

Mr. Mullin: The EC Landfill Directive will prohibit from disposal in landfill sites special wastes which are infectious clinical wastes or which, in the conditions of landfill, are explosive, corrosive, oxidising, or flammable. The Directive will allow the disposal of other special and toxic waste to landfills, provided that the waste meets the acceptance criteria in Annexe II of the Directive. The Directive prohibits the landfill of all liquid wastes.

Tour Buses

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many tour buses are registered to operate in (a) London, (b) Oxford, (c) Cambridge, (d) Bath and (e) Stratford upon Avon; and how many are entitled to a fuel-duty rebate. [113440]

Mr. Hill: Local bus service registrations outside London do not identify tour buses as a separate category. It is not therefore possible to supply the information requested for items (b) to (e). In London, around 68 London Local Service Licences have been granted by the Traffic Commissioner for excursions and tours.

Fuel Duty Rebate is paid on bus services which are registered with the Traffic Commissioner as a local bus service, and which meet the requirements of the relevant Regulations, designed to ensure that, among other things, they are available to the general public. Fuel Duty Rebate claims do not separately identify tour buses.

Recycling

Mr. Bill O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what steps he plans to take to increase the income from Packaging Recovery Notes to ensure the continuing recovery and recycling of glass and other waste materials; and if he will make a statement. [113423]

Mr. Meacher: The main purpose of the Packaging Waste Recovery Note (PRN) is to enable those obligated under the packaging Regulations to demonstrate compliance with their obligations. In addition, the PRN is intended to direct the necessary resources at increasing collection and reprocessing capacity in the UK and developing end-use markets for recyclate. The PRN system is a market-based system and PRN prices are therefore affected both by the balance between targets and available capacity and by developments in the international market. Prices for both virgin and recycled materials are currently low.

Given the targets in the EC Directive on Packaging and Packaging Waste that the UK must meet in 2001, it is clear that a considerable increase in recovery will be needed between now and 2001 if the targets are to be met and we would expect this to influence PRN prices.

Seeds Regulations

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will place in the Library his response to the MAFF response to changes to the 1982 Seeds Regulations. [113475]

Mr. Meacher [holding answer 7 March 2000]: The letter from MAFF on the 1982 Seeds Regulations was circulated to Departments for information only. Since the matter was clearly for MAFF, and not a matter for DETR, a response was not necessary.

Fuel Duty

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions if he will estimate how much it would cost to extend the fuel duty rebate to (a) school buses and (b) dial-a-ride schemes. [113583]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 8 March 2000]: Those school bus services which are registered with the Traffic Commissioner as local bus services, and which are normally available to, and used by, the general public, are already eligible for bus fuel duty rebate.

Possible changes to the scope of bus fuel duty rebate are currently being considered as part of the Commission for Integrated Transport's review of value for money from public financial support for bus services.

At this stage no estimate has been made of the cost of extending eligibility for the rebate specifically to dial-a-ride schemes or to those school bus services which are currently not eligible. Any such estimates would depend on the precise definition of the newly eligible services which was adopted for the purpose and a forecast of eligible mileage run by them.

Housing Green Paper

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions in which month he plans to publish the Green Paper on Housing. [113644]

Mr. Raynsford: We will publish a Housing Green Paper in the reasonably near future aimed at ensuring everyone has the opportunity of a decent home. The Green Paper will be fully consultative and we hope as many people as possible will take the opportunity to let us know what they think of our proposals on the future of housing in the 21st century.

North Wales Main Line

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, pursuant to his answer of 28 February 2000, Official Report, column 6W, on the electrification of the North Wales main line, if he will place in the Library the evidence arising from the investigation into electrifying the North Wales line that led him to the conclusion that electrification could not be justified. [113631]

Mr. Hill [holding answer 10 February 2000]: The Study which investigated the possibility of electrifying the North Wales main line was produced by Virgin trains to the Franchising Director in March 1998. The Study was produced on a commercial in confidence basis and I am therefore unable to place a copy in the Library.

Homeowners

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions how many (a) homeowners and (b) ethnic minority homeowners there were in Britain in each year since 1990. [113885]

Mr. Raynsford: The table shows estimates from the Labour Force Survey of (a) the total number of homeowner households; and (b) the number of homeowner households headed by a member of an ethnic minority, in Britain in each year since 1990.

Homeowner and ethnic minority homeowner households in Great Britain: 1990–99

Thousand

	All home owning household	Home owning households with ethnic minority head of household
1990	14,725	479
1991	15,024	538
1992	15,191	555
1993	15,408	539
1994	15,660	520
1995	15,919	536
1996	15,625	530
1997	16,212	594
1998	16,385	635
1999	16,730	648

Notes:

1. Like all estimates from sample surveys, these figures are subject to sampling variability
2. Data shown are for the Spring quarter (March-May) of each year

Blight Notices

Angela Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what action he intends to take to amend the eligibility of small business owners to serve blight notices in the light of the 2000 non-domestic rating revaluation; and if he will make a statement. [114488]

Mr. Raynsford: The Town and Country Planning (Blight Provisions) (England) Order, laid today, will raise from £18,000 to £24,600 the annual rateable value limit at or below which businesses are eligible to serve a blight notice. The change, which will come into effect on 1 April 2000, means that small businesses will not be disadvantaged when the year 2000 non-domestic rate revaluation comes into effect on the same date.

The new threshold also applies to businesses claiming compensation for loss of value under Part I of the Land Compensation Act 1973 when their premises are affected by physical factors such as noise, vibration, fumes and artificial lighting from the use of new or altered public works such as highways and aerodromes.

This threshold also applies under the 1973 Act to enable proprietors aged 60 or over to claim disturbance compensation on the basis of the total extinguishment of their business when they are subject to a compulsory purchase order. This allows claimants of that age to retire if they do not want to re-establish their business elsewhere.

Thameslink 2000

Mr. Quinn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when the public inquiry into Railtrack's applications for orders under the Transport and Works Act 1992 in respect of Thameslink 2000 will commence. [114491]

Mr. Hill: The public inquiry will start on Tuesday 27 June 2000 at 10 a.m. at Bankside House, London School of Economics, 24 Sumner Street, London SE1 9JA. There will be a pre-inquiry meeting to discuss practical arrangements for the inquiry on Monday 10 April at 2 pm at the same venue. The inspector appointed to conduct the inquiry is Mr. D. Ward Bsc. CEng. MICE FIHT. The inquiry will also consider Railtrack's application for various listed building and conservation area consents required for the scheme. All persons who have made representations to the Secretary of State about Thameslink 2000 will be informed of these arrangements.

Port Marine Operations

Mr. Blizzard: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions what progress has been made with the development of a safety code for port marine operations; and if he will make a statement. [114492]

Mr. Hill: The Port Marine Safety Code is being published on Monday and copies will be placed in the Library of the House. The Code represents an important waypoint in the development with all parties in the ports and shipping industry of an agreed national standard for the discharge by harbour authorities of their legal functions relating to marine safety. It applies to port marine operations the well-established principles of risk assessment and safety management systems. It establishes a measure by which harbour authorities can be accountable for the legal powers and duties which they have to run their harbours safely. We are asking all harbour authorities with these obligations, to prepare plans to implement the Code by the end of 2001. In the meantime, work will continue with the industry to develop competence standards for all port marine professionals, and associated qualifications. We are also supporting the development of a guide to good practice on port marine operations, which we hope will be completed this year.

Disabled Motorists

Mr. McWalter: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions when he will introduce the new European model parking badge for disabled motorists. [114549]

Mr. Hill: The Regulations have been laid before Parliament today.

We aim to phase in the new parking badge over three years from 1 April 2000 as existing badges come up for renewal and as new applications are processed. It is, of course, only the design of the badge which is affected. The eligibility criteria and the concessions provided under the parking scheme will be unchanged.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Family Planning Services

Mr. Gareth R. Thomas: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what action he has taken to promote access to family planning services; and if he will make a statement. [113682]

Mr. George Howarth [holding answer 9 March 2000]: Family planning services are provided in community and hospital settings throughout Northern Ireland. To improve access provision has also been made for evening and weekend services and for services which meet the needs of particular groups such as young people. In addition 95 per cent. if General Practitioners provide family planning services.

Paper and Timber Products

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps he has taken to ensure that paper and timber products purchased by his Department come from a sustainable source. [110155]

Mr. Ingram: The Government Purchasing Agency follows the guidance issued by the Secretary of State in his Policy Statement on Green Housekeeping, which closely follows the model policy statement.

The Government Purchasing Agency has established contracts for the purchase of paper and timber products on behalf of the NICS, Departments, their Agencies and NDPB's.

The contracts require that where virgin pulp is used it must come from sustainably managed woodlands.

More guidance is available to buyers from the DETR's Green Guide for Buyers, which is available to all our staff on the Internet.

The Agency also issues to all our tenderers, the booklet "Selling to Government—A Green Guide for Suppliers of Goods and Services to the Northern Ireland Civil Service" which sets out the requirements for paper and wood products in more detail.

Mr. Reed: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will ensure that paper and timber products purchased by his Department are independently certified by the Forest Stewardship Council as coming from a sustainable source. [110156]

Mr. Ingram: The FSC label is accepted by buyers as demonstrating that timber and timber products have come from sustainably managed sources. However, it is not practicable to require that all paper and timber products purchased by the Department are independently certified by the Forest Stewardship Council because this might discriminate against any equally valid schemes and therefore be against procurement rules.

Specifying just the FSC label might also result in us failing to meet all our requirements as currently only a tiny percentage of timber products are currently FSC certified. That is why the Department's policy statement for greening its operations suggests that evidence of sustainability might take the form of a certificate issued under a credible, preferably independent, verification scheme; or other documents which demonstrate the operation of an environmental management system incorporating forest management criteria that conform with internationally recognised principles such as the Helsinki Guidelines.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from his Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113967]

Mr. Lock: My Department did not use any couriers to distribute news releases over the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. LCD press notices are distributed to the media by e-mail, fax and post. LCD press notices for matters other than judicial appointments are placed on the Central Office of Information's (COI) press notice website and are given wide electronic distribution by the news distribution service which is also managed by the COI.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which his Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113993]

Mr. Lock: Over the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 my Department issued 1,062 press notices. Targeted distribution relies on the subject and content of each specific press release. Provision of the distribution lists for all press notices issued over the period could only be undertaken at disproportionate cost.

All LCD press notices for matters other than judicial appointments are placed on the Central Office of Information's (COI) press notice website and are given wide electronic distribution by the news distribution service which is also managed by the COI.

CULTURE, MEDIA AND SPORT

Lottery

Mr. Fearn: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what recent assessment he has made of the distribution of lottery funding across the regions of the United Kingdom. [113642]

Kate Hoey: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State has directed the Lottery distributors to ensure that all parts of the country have access to funding. My Department regularly monitors the distribution of funding to the regions and to areas of economic and social deprivation and it is clear that some areas have to date benefited less than others. My Department and the Lottery distributors have commissioned joint research into the impact of the National Lottery on coalfield areas which I expect to hold lessons for these and others areas of low take-up.

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what was the total Lottery funding made available to the English Sports Council in (a) 1997–98 and (b) 1998–99; and what is the estimated total Lottery funding to be made available to Sport England in each of the years (i) 1999–2000, (ii) 2000–01 and (iii) 2001–02. [113770]

Kate Hoey: The total amount of Lottery proceeds (including interest) allocated to the English Sports Council for 1997–98 and 1998–99 was:

£ million

Year	Amount of lottery proceeds
1997–98	307
1998–99	255

The total Lottery proceeds (including interest) to be allocated to Sport England for 1999–2000, 2000–01 and 2001–02 have been estimated using the Lottery income scenarios which the Department sent to Distributing Bodies in October.

Million

Year	Forecast income
1999–2000	£206-£211
2000–01	£185-£221
2001–02	£170-£226

The forecast for 1999–2000 was calculated by adding the share of Lottery proceeds allocated to Sport England from 1 April 1999 to the end of January 2000 to estimates for February and March 2000 based on the Lottery income forecast scenarios.

Museum Funding

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport what plans he has to alter the funding arrangements for national museums. [114117]

Mr. Alan Howarth: I have no such plans.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from his Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113971]

Mr. Chris Smith: The Department has not used outside couriers to distribute news releases in that period.

The Parliamentary Lobby is provided with copies of news releases by the Department's messengers. The cost of this exercise cannot be separately estimated.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which his Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113998]

Mr. Chris Smith: News releases are routinely sent to the Press Association (and if relevant PA Sport), national daily and Sunday newspapers, relevant BBC and ITN outlets, Sky News and IRN.

All releases are also given to the COI's News Distribution Service, which in turn supplies a copy to the Parliamentary Online Information Service (POLIS), which is available on-line to all hon. Members.

If releases have a regional angle, copies are either sent direct to local papers and broadcasters, or distributed by the relevant COI regional office. Further distribution depends on the particular news release and we could not, without disproportionate cost, provide a comprehensive list of bodies who have received one or more releases during the period in question.

New Millennium Experience Company

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Culture, Media and Sport if he will publish the names of unpaid creditors of the New Millennium Experience Company, together with the amount owed in each case and the dates of the relevant invoices; and if he will make a statement. [113510]

Janet Anderson [holding answer 7 March 2000]: The amount owed to suppliers by the New Millennium Experience Company (NMEC) is commercially confidential. Disclosure of such information would be in breach of contractual terms between NMEC and the third party.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

National Minimum Wage

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many calls have been received by the Minimum Wage Hotline (a) in his Department's administrative region containing Paisley, (b) in Scotland and (c) nationally; and what action he is taking to publicise the existence of the service. [113552]

Mr. Alan Johnson [holding answer 8 March 2000]: Nationally, as at 7 March, the National Minimum Wage helpline had received over 157,000 calls. Information on the total number of calls received by the helpline is not broken down by region. Some calls are anonymous and addresses are not taken. Others are simple inquiries where it would not be appropriate to request such information.

The helpline telephone number (0845 6000 678) is given in all National Minimum Wage literature and publicity. Last spring we spent £5 million publicising the minimum wage which included national TV coverage and gave details of the rates and confidential helpline number.

There will be further publicity in advance of the youth rate increase on 1 June, and the main rate increase on 1 October, and this will also feature the helpline number prominently.

Utilities Bill

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) when consultation took place with consumer groups between 20 January and 2 March on the decision to remove the provisions concerning telecommunications and water industries from the Utilities Bill; and what responses were received; [113570]

(2) which consumer groups were consulted on the decision to remove the provisions concerning telecommunications and water industries from the Utilities Bill between 20 January and 2 March. [113571]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 8 March 2000]: Both the National Consumer Council and the Consumers Association made representations to the Department.

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will list (a) the meetings and contacts his Department has had with the telecommunications industry in connection with the Utilities Bill between 20 January and 2 March, (b) the telecommunications companies involved and (c) the occasions on which Ministers from his Department attended; [113568]

(2) what representations his Department received on behalf of the telecommunications industries between 20 January and 2 March in connection with the Utilities Bill; and if he will list the telecommunications companies involved. [113569]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 8 March 2000]: A number of letter have been received from the Other Licensed Operators (OLO) group and from individual companies including BT. The OLO group comprises Atlantic Telecom, Eurobell, Kingston Group, ntl, Telewest, COLT, Cable and Wireless, Energis, GTS, Global Crossing, Global One, Hermes, MCI/Worldcom, Norweb Telecom, Thus, Teleglobe, Telia, Telinco, Telstra, Viatel, Dolphin, One2One, Orange and Vodaphone.

Officials of the DTI met the OLO group on 15 February for a regular liaison meeting and the Utilities Bill was discussed. No DTI Ministers attended.

Regional Initiatives

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which of his Department's regional initiatives will come under the remit of the new unit to co-ordinate the Government's approach to the regions. [113157]

Mr. Caborn: The work of the Government Offices for the Regions on behalf of the DTI will come under the remit of the new unit to co-ordinate the Government's approach to the regions.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which his Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113986]

Mr. Byers: All DTI News Releases are distributed to the media through the Central Office of Information. The COI's News Distribution Service distributes news releases electronically to all the main national and regional newspapers, news agencies and to broadcasting organisations. The COI distribute News Releases via fax and mail to other media organisations who have asked to receive DTI News Releases. The COI's Regional Offices also distribute DTI News Releases via fax and mail to their local media organisations. All DTI News Releases are available on the Internet.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from his Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113965]

Mr. Byers: Between 2 May 1997 and 29 February 2000 the DTI has used no couriers to distribute news releases. All DTI News Releases are distributed to the media through the Central Office of Information.

Cash Terminals

Dr. Cable: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurances have been given by Barclays and other banks committed to installing cash terminals in branch post offices as regards (a) access and (b) charges for customers belonging to banks and mutuals which do not have the same outlets; and what impact the decision of the LINK group of banks to allow ATM charging will have on the assurances. [113179]

Mr. Alan Johnson: My right hon. Friend considers that the imposition of such charges will impact disproportionately on the socially excluded and those in rural areas. People on fixed budgets, particularly pensioners and the unemployed, should not be charged £2.50 a time to withdraw small amounts of cash. If charges are to be introduced, we will ensure that consumers know what they are before they proceed with a transaction. If the banks will not do this voluntarily, my right hon. Friend has powers under the Prices Act 1974 to compel them.

Under the new Competition Act 1998, the Director General of Fair Trading can investigate whether the LINK agreement on surcharges is in any way anti-competitive and he now has powers to impose severe penalties for infringements of the prohibitions of the Act.

I understand that the Post Office does not have a commercial agreement with Barclays regarding the installation of cash machines in post offices. Contract arrangement with the proposed partners have not yet been finalised.

No assurances have been provided by potential partners, nor have they indicated yet how they will react to the LINK decision on charging which is under review. Access and charging arrangements will, in the first instance, be commercial matters for the Post Office and its partners.

International Price Comparisons

Mr. Chope: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the cost to his Department of the survey on international price comparisons. [111638]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 22 February 2000]: The cost was £88,066 (including VAT).

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the cost of the AC Nielsen survey into international price comparisons; and what products were included in the survey. [114075]

Mr. Byers [holding answer 9 March 2000]: The cost was £88,066 (including VAT). The report contains a complete list of items for which comparisons were made. The report is available from the Library of the House.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Stakeholder Pensions

Mr. Goggins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when the draft regulations on stakeholder pensions will be issued for consultation. [114550]

Mr. Rooker: The stakeholder pensions draft regulations have been issued today for consultation.

Copies of "Stakeholder pensions—Consultation on Draft Regulations" have been placed in the Library and the Vote Office.

Responses to last year's series of consultation papers on stakeholder pensions have been summarised and copies of "Stakeholder pensions—summary of responses to the government proposals" are also available in the Library and Vote Office.

Departmental Solicitors

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the pilot scheme giving local authorities access to departmental solicitors. [114086]

Angela Eagle: The pilot scheme giving local authorities access to Departmental solicitors has been extended and cases are still being referred. The pilot will be assessed when all the information is received.

Order Books (Bar Coding)

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will list the (i) areas in which pilots of barcoded orderbooks and giros have taken place, (ii) duration of each pilot and (iii) estimated savings from each pilot; [113461]

(2) what is the monetary value of fraud involving barcoded order books to date; [113626]

(3) what are the savings to date from the barcoding of order books in each of the pilot areas; [113627]

(4) if he will list (a) the pilot areas for the barcoding of order books and (b) the duration of each of the pilots. [113628]

Mr. Rooker [holding answer 7 March 2000]: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 9 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking about barcoded order books.

Barcoding of Order Books was first used for the Electronic Stop Notice System (ESNS) for post offices within the area of London bounded by the M25. Initially introduced in 1992 in 17 post offices, this was expanded to 180 post offices in 1994 and then to 1460 post offices in April 1995 and has been in continuous operation since.

Following the introduction of ESNS, the order Book Control Service (OBCS) has been piloted for use in a number of areas. However, you will appreciate that to divulge the exact areas involved could enable fraudsters to avoid detection.

Implementation of OBCS, which uses the equipment installed by the Post Office as part of its automation under the Horizon Project, began in May 1997 when the system was installed in 204 "live trial" post offices. A further 95 posts offices went live within these areas in May 1999, extending the "live trial" to 299 post offices. These areas are continuing to use OBCS.

These live trials are intended to test the equipment and processes involved, but were not set up to measure fraud savings. No information is available for individual pilots or of the value of fraud involving barcoded order books.

There have been no pilots of barcoded girocheques.

I hope this is helpful.

Child Benefit

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what checks are routinely made on child benefit claimants to ensure their children are in full-time education; and if he will make a statement on planned reforms in this area. [113816]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 9 March 2000.

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what checks are routinely made on child benefit claimants to ensure their children are in full-time education; and if he will make a statement on planned reforms in this area.

When a child reaches age 15 the Child Benefit Centre write and ask the parent or guardian to confirm that the child will be continuing their education after age 16. They write again when the child turns 17 years old asking for confirmation of continuing full time education.

In addition, parents or guardians of all children are reminded of the need to report changes, including leaving full-time education, whenever, their award is changed or reviewed. In practice, this is at least once a year.

In addition to these routine checks, the Benefits Agency is currently checking entitlement to Child Benefit in a random selection of cases involving 16 to 19 year old children. This exercise will be completed at the end of March 2000. The findings will be used to inform decisions on measures to prevent fraud in cases where Child Benefit continues to be claimed for a person who has left full-time education.

Benefits Agency

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if staff calculating benefit entitlement at the Benefits Agency will be able to electronically access information held by the Inland Revenue on each of the tax credits. [113623]

Angela Eagle: The administration of benefits is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my right hon Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 9 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking if staff calculating benefit entitlement at the Benefits Agency will be able to electronically access information held by the Inland Revenue on each of the tax credits.

Relevant information held by the Inland Revenue Tax Credit Office can be accessed electronically by Benefits Agency staff to enable them to accurately calculate benefit entitlement.

There is a mechanism which allows one computer system to access the enquiry dialogues of another. This enables staff within the BA to access the enquiry dialogues of the Tax Credit system and vice versa.

Fraud

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to improve the medical expertise of the fraud investigators in each of his Department's agencies which execute counter-fraud work. [113815]

Mr. Rooker: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my right hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Frank Field, dated 9 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking what plans he has to improve the medical expertise of the fraud investigators in each of his Department's agencies which execute counter-fraud work.

Department of Social Security fraud investigators are trained to a high standard, ensuring all aspects of investigation are carried out professionally.

At present there is no specific training aimed at improving a fraud officer's medical expertise, neither are there any plans to provide any as fraud officers are not tasked with gathering medical information. Their role is to establish whether the customer's activities are consistent with the circumstances stated in their claim. If the claim involves medical decisions, the fraud officer's role is to establish whether the customer's current activities are consistent with the stated mobility, care needs or incapacity as documented in their claim. They do this by recording information gathered from observation of, and interviews with the customer. Photographic and video evidence is often gathered in these investigations.

Fraud officers never take decisions on benefit entitlement. Their role is to gather evidence and pass it to the appropriate District Manager. They never make medical decisions and cannot influence the decision making process. The District Manager may choose to pass the case on to an independent "lay decision maker" who can seek medical evidence from a General Practitioner, consultant or hospital. They may also request examination by an Examining Medical Practitioner or seek advice from the provider of Medical Services to the Benefits Agency (Sema Group).

I hope this is helpful.

Housing Benefit

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many representations he has received on implementation by local authorities of the Housing Benefit Verification Framework. [113651]

Angela Eagle: The Department receives inquiries and comments from a range of sources including individual local authorities, representative organisations, and individuals through correspondence, telephone calls, seminars, working groups and meetings. It is therefore not possible to place a number on the representations we have received about the Verification Framework (VF).

We have monitored the live running of the VF from its launch and have already made several improvements to the VF in the light of operational experience. We will continue to monitor the VF and will consider further improvements when we have analysed information from the range of sources available, including any representations we may receive.

Dr. Iddon: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what assessment he has made of the impact of implementation of the Housing Benefit Verification Framework on the level of rent arrears for private sector landlords, voluntary housing organisations and housing associations which provide accommodation for the vulnerable and socially excluded. [113649]

Angela Eagle: The day-to-day administration of Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit is the responsibility of local authorities. We are already working towards driving forward improvements in the benefit services authorities provide to claimants and their landlords.

From experience gained through the live running of the Verification Framework (VF) we have made several improvements to it. For example, the changes we have made to identity requirements will help vulnerable groups, particularly hostel dwellers and providers. We are evaluating the VF and will continue to learn lessons from its operation.

The Best Value regime, which will be introduced from April, is a key part of the modernisation of local government and one of the main ways that we will be able to measure LA achievements and secure a programme of continuous improvement in the delivery of Housing Benefit (HB). Best Value performance indicators for HB administration will include the key areas of speed and accuracy so that all claims can be decided speedily and those claiming benefit get the right amount first time round.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what powers are available to him to require local authorities to participate in (a) the Area Benefit Review of Housing Benefit and (b) the Housing Benefit Review. [114004]

Angela Eagle: There is no explicit legislative power to require local authorities to participate in exercises to measure levels of fraud and error in Housing Benefit. Currently 195 Local Authorities participate in the measurement of fraud in Non-Standard Housing Benefit through the Benefits Agency's programme of Area Benefit Reviews.

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if the Area Benefit Review of Housing Benefit will include a representative sample of claims for people who do not claim either (a) income support or (b) jobseekers' allowance. [113999]

Angela Eagle: The exercise to measure levels of fraud and error in Housing Benefit through the Benefits Agency's Area Benefit Review programme is currently restricted to the two thirds of Housing Benefit cases where benefit is paid with Income Support or Jobseeker's Allowance (Income Support).

Our aim is also to measure levels of fraud and error in the remaining third of the Housing Benefit caseload and work is proceeding on the design of a suitable mechanism.

Fraud and Error

Mr. Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the savings in fraud and error in (a) jobseeker's allowance and (b) income support if those area directorates with above average levels of fraud and error reduced fraud and error to the current average; and if the achievement of such a reduction by March 2002 would fulfil the relevant departmental public service agreement. [114000]

Mr. Rooker: Overpayments in Jobseeker's Allowance and Income Support would be reduced by £61 million and £75 million a year respectively, if Area Directorates with higher than average levels of overpayment were to reduce them to the present average level. Assuming that expenditure levels remained constant, this would meet our Public Service Agreement target of a 10 per cent. reduction in losses in these benefits.

It is in the nature of an average of a set of values that the set will contain some values above the average. Nevertheless, we are paying close attention to how those areas with higher than average losses are planning to reduce them.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which his Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113991]

Mr. Rooker: All national, regional and local newspapers and media bodies to which the Department sent news releases between 2 May 1997 and 29 February 2000 are distributed by the Central Office of Information (COI) on behalf of the Department's Headquarters and Agencies. All addresses are listed in the COI New Distribution Service list. A copy of this has been placed in the House of Commons Library.

The list contains details of organisations to which news releases are faxed and those which are affected by electronic transfer.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from his Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113981]

Mr. Rooker: The Department's Headquarters and Agency Press Offices do not use couriers to distribute news releases.

Benefit Claims

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of (a) men and (b) women who are not claiming the benefits to which they are entitled in the (i) constituency of Middlesbrough, South and Cleveland, East, (ii) Teesside Region, (iii) Northern Region and (iv) United Kingdom. [114120]

Mr. Bayley: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is in the table.

Estimated numbers not claiming income-related benefits, Great Britain 1997–98

Benefit	Numbers entitled and not claiming	Percentage of those entitled and not claiming who were: Single men	Single women	Couples
Income Support	640,000 to 1,150,000	25	58	17
Housing Benefit	0 to 420,000	23	43	35
Council Tax Benefit	880,000 to 1,630,000	18	40	42

Notes:

1. Figures are rounded to the nearest 10,000 and nearest percentage point.
2. Figures may not add exactly due to rounding.
3. Figures are based on data from the Family Resources Survey, 1997–98.
4. Figures are subject to sampling error, response biases and reporting errors.
5. It is not possible to produce reliable estimates of numbers not claiming their entitlement at constituency or sub-regional levels. The scope for regional estimates will be kept under review; no figures are currently available.

Benefits (Paisley)

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people in Paisley, South constituency are in receipt of (a) Jobseeker's Allowance and (b) Incapacity Benefit. [113175]

Angela Eagle: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Douglas Alexander, dated 9 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Questions asking how many people in Paisley South constituency are in receipt of (a) Jobseekers Allowance and (b) Incapacity Benefit.

As at August 1999 there were 2,392 Jobseekers Allowance customers and 3,600 Incapacity Benefit customers in Paisley South Parliamentary constituency.

I hope this is helpful.

Benefits Agency Leaflets

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when Benefits Agency leaflet GL24 superseded leaflet NI246. [113080]

Angela Eagle: This is a matter for Peter Mathison, the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Steve Webb, dated 9 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to respond to your recent Parliamentary Question asking when the Benefits Agency (BA) leaflet GL24 superseded leaflet NI246.

Leaflet NI246, "How to Appeal", is appropriate to appeals being made under the old adjudication system. Leaflet GL24, "If You Think Our Decision Is Wrong", applies to the new rules on decision making and appeals (DMA). These rules were introduced progressively from June through to November 1999. The table attached shows when benefits changed to the DMA procedures.

Both leaflets are currently in circulation, however, NI246 is no longer produced and should only be available on request by those customers who have appeals outstanding under the old regulations.

I hope this is helpful.

Date changed to DMA	Benefit
1 June 1999	Child Support
5 July 1999	Child Benefit Guardians Allowance Industrial Injuries Benefit
6 September 1999	Retirement Pension Widows Benefit Incapacity Benefit Severe Disablement Allowance Maternity Allowance
5 October 1999	Working Families Tax Credit Disabled Persons Tax Credit
18 October 1999	Jobseekers Allowance Disability Living Allowance Attendance Allowance Invalid Care Allowance
29 November 1999	Income Support Social Fund

Winter Fuel Payments

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many Winter Fuel Payments were not made before Christmas (a) for the UK and (b) by region. [113341]

Angela Eagle: The information is not available in the format requested. Such information as is available is as follows.

All 1999–2000 Winter Fuel Payments were issued to eligible customers by three routes direct to home address, by automated credit transfer into a bank account or to the Post Office. All payments were dispatched by Royal Mail to customers by Christmas 1999.

Approximately 85,000 payments were not collected for a variety of reasons and were returned by the Post Offices. Subsequently, these were investigated and payments made as necessary.

Cold Weather Payments

Mr. Alexander: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of (a) the number of claimants and (b) the cost of Cold Weather Payments in Paisley, South constituency in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997, (iii) 1998 and (iv) 1999. [113480]

Angela Eagle: The administration of the Social Fund is a matter for Peter Mathison the Chief Executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Peter Mathison to Mr. Douglas Alexander, dated 9 March 2000:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about what estimate he has made of (a) the number of claimants and (b) the cost of cold weather payments in Paisley South constituency in (i) 1996, (ii) 1997, (iii) 1998 and (iv) 1999.

Cold Weather Payments (CWPs) are triggered when the average temperature is recorded as, or is forecast to be, 0°C or below over seven consecutive days for a weather station area. Temperature information is collected through a network of 72 Met Office weather stations. Each weather station covers specified postcode districts.

The information is not available in the requested format. This is because data concerning CWPs is collected by weather station areas. These areas do not correspond to Benefits Agency district or constituency boundaries. The attached table details the total estimated number of recipients and estimated total cost of CWPs during 1996 to 1999 for the weather stations serving the constituency area. However, it should be noted that the large Bishopton weather station area includes other constituencies as well as Paisley South.

I hope this is helpful.

Appendix One

From this winter (1999/00) the postcodes within the Paisley South constituency were linked to Bishopton weather station. Prior to this winter, the constituency was served by Abbotsinch (Glasgow Airport) weather station, which closed last year. Schedule 1 of the Social Fund Cold Weather Payments (General) Amendment Regulations 1999, details the post codes covered by the Bishopton weather station.

Number of estimated qualifying recipients for Bishopton/Abbotsinch weather stations and estimated total cost of Cold Weather Payments (CWP)

Year	Estimated qualifiers	Number of triggers	Total cost £
1995–96[1]	182,660	3	4,657,830
1996–97[1]	170,835	2	2,904,195
1997–98[1]	169,399	0	0.00
1998–99[1]	165,882	0	0.00
1999–2000	165,060	0	0.00

[1] These years were covered by Abbotsinch weather station

Notes:

1. Temperatures are monitored between 1 November and 31 March, the following year
2. The estimated cost has been calculated by multiplying the number of triggers by the number of estimated qualifiers which is then multiplied by the cost per CWP (£8.50).

EDUCATION AND EMPLOYMENT

Bullying

Ms Kelly: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will estimate how many school pupils committed suicide as a result of homophobic bullying in each of the last five years. [112913]

Jacqui Smith: There is no information collected centrally on which to base such an estimate.

Jobseeker's Allowance

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many unemployed recipients of jobseeker's allowance or income support have been sanctioned in each month since May 1992, aged (a) 18 to 24 and (b) 25 and over. [112752]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 2 March 2000]: Sanctions were introduced in October 1996 with Jobseeker's Allowance, so sanctions information is only available from that time. Furthermore, statistics on the number and types of decisions given by Employment Service Officers on labour market questions are recorded on a quarterly rather than monthly basis, and they are not broken down into age groups.

The total numbers of sanctions imposed on claims to Jobseeker's Allowance in each quarter since the introduction of sanctions in October 1996 are:

Quarter ending	Sanctions imposed
31 December 1996	21,827
31 March 1997	46,192
30 June 1997	52,738
30 September 1997	53,686
31 December 1997	49,960
31 March 1998	47,105
30 June 1998	37,802
30 September 1998	39,020
31 December 1998	40,107
31 March 1999	44,000
30 June 1999	41,556
30 September 1999	38,346

Statistics on the numbers of sanctions and other decisions given by Employment Service Officers are published in a quarterly summary, the "Analysis of Sector Decision Making" (formerly known as the "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions"), copies of which are held in the Library. The latest quarter for which statistics have been published is the quarter ending 30 September 1999.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many unemployed recipients of jobseeker's allowance or income support have been sanctioned in each of the last five financial years, aged (a) 18 to 24 and (b) over 24. [112753]

Ms Jowell [holding answer 2 March 2000]: I must firstly explain that sanctions were introduced in October 1996 with Jobseeker's Allowance, so sanctions information is only available from that time. Furthermore, statistics on the number and types of decisions given by Employment Service Officers on labour market questions are not broken down into age groups.

The total numbers of sanctions imposed on claims to Jobseeker's Allowance in each operational year since the introduction of sanctions in October 1996 are:

Year ending	Sanctions imposed
31 March 1997	68,019
31 March 1998	203,489
31 March 1999	160,929

Statistics on the numbers of sanctions and other decisions given by Employment Service Officers are published in a quarterly summary, the "Analysis of Sector Decision Making" (formerly known as the "Analysis of Adjudication Officers' Decisions"), copies of which are held in the Library. The latest quarter for which statistics have been published is the quarter ending 30 September 1999.

Job Creation (Shropshire)

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment how many new jobs have been created since 1 May 1997 in (a) Shrewsbury and Atcham and (b) Shropshire; and if he will make a statement. [110130]

Ms Jowell: The information is shown in the table.

	Employment level (Thousand)	Employment rate (Percentage)
Shropshire
March-May 1997	186	74.0
March-May 1999	218	78.4
September-November 1997	200	73.8
September-November 1999	222	78.3
Shrewsbury and Atcham local authority district
March-May 1997	48	78.9
March-May 1999	48	77.6
September-November 1997	49	70.8
September-November 1999	52	81.1

As these figures are seasonally unadjusted, it is only appropriate to make comparisons over whole years. In the two years to the latest figures (September-November 1999) the number of people in employment has risen by 22,000 in Shropshire and by 3,000 in Shrewsbury and Atcham. In the two years from March-May 1997, the number in employment rose by 32,000 in Shropshire and was unchanged in Shrewsbury and Atcham.

The Labour Force Survey is a sample survey, and sampling variation is greater the smaller the estimate; all the changes shown here are well within sampling variation.

Racism

Ms Oona King: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those local education authorities in England that have adopted action plans to tackle institutional racism since publication of the Stephen Lawrence inquiry report; what those action plans propose; and what action those local education authorities have undertaken to implement those plans. [111106]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 February 2000]: Our "Social Inclusion: Pupil Support" guidance gives advice to Local Education Authorities; schools and governors about dealing with racial incidents in schools. Local Education Authorities should be able to provide assistance to schools dealing with racial harassment and bullying, within the guidelines we have issued. It is for Local Education Authorities to decide how best to support schools in addressing racism, without imposing additional burdens on them. Information on the action taken by Local Education Authorities to help schools deal with racism is not held centrally.

My right hon. Friend the Home Secretary's Action Plan and first Annual Report set out what the Government have achieved, and action yet to be taken across the public services, to respond to the recommendations of the Stephen Lawrence Inquiry Report. In addition, this Department published a Memorandum on its response to the three recommendations of Inquiry Report which relate to education. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Mr. Stephen Twigg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment if he will list those local education authorities in England that have established strategies for working with the police in relation to racist incidents committed against or by pupils and students of the LEA. [110368]

Jacqui Smith [holding answer 22 February 2000]: Our "Social Inclusion: Pupil Support" guidance, issued in July 1999, makes clear that all Local Education Authorities should receive annual information from school governing bodies on the pattern and frequency of racist incidents in schools. It is for Local Education Authorities to decide how best to develop strategies to support schools, pupils and students in addressing racism, in the light of the information they receive each year. This would include joint working with local police forces, where this is appropriate.

British Ski Instructors in France

Mr. Gill: To ask the Secretary of State for Education and Employment what representations he has received on the obstacles to employment of British ski instructors in France; and if he will make a statement. [113918]

Mr. Wicks: No representations have been received this skiing season. My officials are continuing to work closely with the British Association of Snowsport Instructors (BASI) and the European Commission on this matter.

TREASURY

Employment Statistics

Mr. Cox: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) women aged 55 to 60 years and (b) men aged 60 to 65 years were in full-time employment in the Greater London area on 1 February. [113834]

Miss Melanie Johnson: The information requested falls within the responsibility of the Director of the Office for National Statistics. I have asked him to reply.

Letter from John Pullinger to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 10 March 2000:

The Director of the Office for National Statistics (ONS) has been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question on older people in full-time employment in Greater London on 1 February 2000. I am replying in Dr Holt's absence.

The Labour Force Survey (LFS) is the government's main source of labour market data on individuals. The most recent data available from the LFS is for autumn (September to November) 1999. In this quarter, the LFS estimated the number of women aged 55 to 59 in full-time employment in London as 51,000. During the same period, the number of men in full-time employment aged 60 to 64 in London was also 51,000.

People aged 16 or over are classed as in employment by the LFS if they have done at least one hour of paid work (as an employee or self-employed) in the week prior to their LFS interview or if they have a job that they are temporarily away from. People who do unpaid work in a family business and people on Government supported training and employment programmes are also included according to the International Labour Organisation convention.

The definition of whether somebody is working full or part-time is based on the respondent's self assessment.

Working Families Tax Credit

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what has been the average value of the child care component of the Working Families Tax Credit for (a) England and (b) each region; [110546]

(2) if he will estimate what percentage of average actual child care costs are met by the child care component of the Working Families Tax Credit in (a) England and (b) each region. [110547]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates for the average childcare tax credit and the percentage of child care costs that this represents within awards of the Working Families Tax Credit made by the end of January 2000 are given in the table. The national average childcare tax credit at £31 is 40 per cent. higher than the average amount of extra Family Credit awarded for child care charges at the end of August 1999 at £22.

[1] Calculated as the extra amount of Working Families Tax Credit arising from the Childcare Tax Credit for families with eligible child care costs

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been spent to date on the Childcare Tax Credit of the Working Families Tax Credit; and what is his latest estimate of expenditure in (a) this financial year and (b) in each of the next two financial years. [108761]

Dawn Primarolo: The extra amounts of Working Families Tax Credit arising from the Childcare Tax Credit in awards made by the end of January 2000 will result in expenditure of about £85 million during the 26 week period of award. It is estimated that for 2000–01, the first full year of the credit, the extra expenditure due to the Childcare Tax Credits will be about £275 million. An estimate for 2001–02 is not available.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many parents are claiming the Childcare Tax Credit in respect of children (a) aged under eight years and (b) over eight years; and what is the average payment per (i) family and (ii) child. [108760]

Dawn Primarolo: The ages of children relating to the Childcare Tax Credits in the Working Families Tax Credit are not readily available. An analysis based on the ages of all children in families receiving the Childcare Tax Credit is given in the table. These figures are for awards of the Working Families Tax Credit made by the end of January 2000.

Family composition	Number of families with Childcare Tax Credit
All children aged under 8	47,500
All children aged 8 or over	9,500
At least one child under 8 and at least one child aged 8 or over	17,000
Total	74,000

Families in receipt of the Childcare Tax Credit received on average an extra £44.50 per week as a result of this credit, or £32.20 per week per child.

Judy Mallaber: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) how many families in Amber Valley are (a) eligible to claim and (b) are claiming ChildCare Tax Credit; and how many children are the subject of such claims; [109044]

(2) what estimate he has made of the average amount by which the incomes of families in receipt of Working Families Tax Credit in Amber Valley have changed as a result of being in receipt of that tax credit; [109043]

(3) how many families in Amber Valley are receiving Working Families Tax Credit who were not previously eligible for Family Credit; [109042]

(4) how many families in Amber Valley have benefited from the Working Families Tax Credit. [109041]

Dawn Primarolo: It is estimated that 1,200 families in Amber Valley have been awarded the Working Families Tax Credit by the end of January 2000, receiving on average around £23 a week more than they would on Family Credit. A more detailed breakdown of these awards is not available because of the small size.

Mr. Willetts: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what is his latest estimate of the take-up of the Childcare Tax Credit of the Working Families Tax Credit; [108752]

(2) how many families have so far received the Childcare Tax Credit of the Working Families Tax Credit; and how many he estimates will receive in (a) the course of this financial year and (b) in each of the next two financial years. [108763]

Dawn Primarolo: Within awards of the Working Families Tax Credit made by the end of January 2000 there were about 74,000 families in receipt of the Childcare Tax Credit. It is estimated that this figure will rise to about 125,000 for 2000–01, the first full year of the credit. An estimate for 2001–02 is not available.

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the actual full-time equivalent child care costs of recipients of the child care tax credit are being met on average through the credit in (a) England and Wales and (b) each region. [111271]

Dawn Primarolo: Estimates given are for couples who both work at least 30 hours a week and lone parents working at least 30 hours a week. These represent the average childcare tax credit within awards of the Working Families Tax Credit made by the end of January 2000, expressed as a percentage of child care costs.

Parliamentary Questions

Ms Buck: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when he will reply to the questions tabled by the hon. Member for Regent's Park and Kensington, North on 14 and 15 February (ref. 110547 and 111271) relating to child care costs. [113926]

Dawn Primarolo: I have already done so.

Taxation

Mr. Webb: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the effect on the net income of each decile group of (a) benefit units and (b) households, of increasing the personal tax allowance to £10,000 per annum for all taxpayers; and if he will estimate the cost of such a policy. [110220]

Dawn Primarolo: The estimated cost of increasing the personal tax allowance to £10,000 per annum for all taxpayers in 2000–01 is estimated to be £27½ billion in the full year. The table shows estimated average gains in net income.

Average gain in net income (£ per week) of gainers from increasing the personal tax allowance to £10,000 per annum for all taxpayers

Notes:
1. The revenue effect is based on the 1997–98 Survey of Personal Income data projected to 2000–01 and is consistent with the November 1999 pre-Budget Report.
2. Deciles are defined in terms of equivalised net income on a benefit unit and household net income basis using the McClements scale; decile boundaries are higher for households than benefit units.

National Insurance

Mr. Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many employers make national insurance contributions in each of the postal districts in Birkenhead. [113188]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 6 March 2000]: I regret that the information requested is not available. Data are not recorded on that basis.

Petroleum Products Smuggling

Mr. Baker: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many successful prosecutions there were in 1998 and 1999 for smuggling petroleum products into Northern Ireland; and what estimate he has made of the tonnage smuggled. [113537]

Dawn Primarolo [holding answer 7 March 2000]: Customs have made the following successful prosecutions for smuggling petroleum products into Northern Ireland.

Financial year	Number
1998–99	12
1999–2000[1]	11

[1] April to February

No estimate of the tonnage smuggled has been made.

Red Diesel

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what recent representations he has received from Her Majesty's Customs and Excise requesting increased funding to improve enforcement of regulations pertaining to the use of red diesel. [113606]

Mr. Timms: The question of funding for Customs and Excise for this and the Department's other responsibilities will be considered as part of the Spending Review 2000.

Mr. Alasdair Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the efficacy of arrangements for enforcing the regulations pertaining to the use of red diesel. [113612]

Mr. Timms: Enforcing the regulations on the use of red diesel is a matter for Her Majesty's Customs and Excise. The efficacy of enforcement arrangements is subject to continuous assessment by Customs.

EU Regional Funds

Mr. Matthew Taylor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the gross budgetary cost to the Exchequer of the Treasury's funding matching available Objective 1 funding; how much EU funding would be unlocked each year over the planning period; and what the cost to UK public funds would be after taking account of the subsequent impact on the British budget rebate. [113607]

Mr. Andrew Smith: European Structural Funding is used alongside, and matched by, money already provided at the national and local level. It is a matter for regional partners to identify match funding from existing sources, both private and public. There are a wide range of existing Government programmes from which match funding can be drawn.

The total allocation to the new UK Objective 1 programmes for 2000–06 is around 4.7 billion euros. The annual allocations profile is likely to be broadly flat. It is not yet possible to determine what the resulting annual expenditure profile will be.

The effect of the UK abatement is, broadly, to refund around two thirds of the difference between the UK's gross contributions to and receipts from the EC Budget. The size of the abatement for a particular year can only be determined once overall EC expenditure for that year is known. Latest forecasts for the UK's net contributions to the EC Budget up to 2001–02 are contained in the 1999 pre-Budget Report (Cm 4479).

Prix Niki

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the (a) purpose and (b) running costs in this financial year of the European Communities' Prix Niki. [112349]

Mr. Vaz: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is readily available from the European Commission.

Monetary Union (Pension Provision)

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on progress made since the 1999 British-Italian conference on considering the effect of EMU on pension provision. [112342]

Mr. Vaz: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is readily available from the European Commission.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Curfews

Mr. Lidington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what increase there will be in the number of offenders eligible for release under the home detention curfew scheme if the Criminal Justice (Mode of Trial) (No. 2) Bill is enacted; and if he will make a statement. [112795]

Mr. Straw [holding answer 3 February 2000]: On the assumptions we have made about the overall effect of the Bill, there would be no increase.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Board

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will wind up the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board; and if he will make a statement. [114489]

Mr. Straw: Under the original criminal injuries compensation scheme, established in August 1964, compensation was assessed by the Criminal Injuries Compensation Board (CICB) on the basis of common law damages. That scheme was superseded from 1 April 1996 by a tariff-based scheme administered by two new bodies, the Criminal Injuries Compensation Authority (CICA) and the Criminal Injuries Compensation Appeals Panel (CICAP). The Board was then left with the residual task of dealing with all outstanding claims lodged before 1 April 1996. There were some 110,000 such cases.

By the end of the current financial year, the Board will have resolved over 100,000 of those cases and its work will largely be done. The Board will accordingly be wound up on 31 March 2000. Any residual old scheme cases still outstanding at that time will be transferred for resolution by legally qualified members of CICAP in accordance with the transitional provisions of the 1996 scheme. Present estimates are that around 6,000 cases will be transferred. The Panel will be set the target of clearing them within two years. The Panel is being strengthened considerably to ensure that it can cope with this additional workload without prejudicing its capacity to deal with appeals made under the 1996 scheme.

I am sure that Ministers in previous Administrations would wish to join me in extending a sincere vote of thanks to all Board members, past and present, for the care and dedication with which they have dealt with claims over the past 35 years.

Gambling Review Body

Mr. Hope: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to announce the membership of the Gambling Review Body. [114490]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Further to the reply my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary gave my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, Southgate (Mr. Twigg) on 16 February 2000, Official Report, column 537W, I have today appointed the following people to be members of the Gambling Review Body:

Mr. David Bishop
Mr. Mihir Bose
Professor Jeffrey Gray
Mr. Peter Dean CBE
Sir John Hoddinott QPM
Mr. Anthony Mackintosh
Ms Phillipa Marks
Ms Sara Nathan
Ms Anesta Weekes QC
Mr. Jonathan Wolff.

Between them, the members will bring a wealth of experience in many areas relevant to the review, such as business, law, economics psychology, accountancy and law enforcement.

Chinese President (State Visit)

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he will publish the report of the Metropolitan police on the policing of the state visit by the President of China. [113924]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Publication of this report is a matter for the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis. I understand that it will take place shortly.

DNA Database

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many individuals have their DNA recorded on the DNA national database; [113922]

(2) what reports he has received concerning inaccurate matches involving the national DNA database and DNA samples; and if he will make a statement; [113921]

(3) what recent reports he has received concerning DNA evidence matched using the DNA national database being used to correct miscarriages of justice on appeal; and if he will make a statement concerning the number of such cases, the nature of the use of the DNA national database for this purpose and his future plans for its use. [113920]

Mr. Charles Clarke: The National DNA Database holds the DNA profiles, obtained from samples of those suspected, cautioned or convicted of a recordable offence, for intelligence purposes. The Database also holds profiles obtained from crime stains left at the scenes of crime. It is managed and operated on behalf of the police by the Forensic Science Service. It currently holds over 700,000 profiles of individuals.

The Home Secretary has received no reports concerning inaccurate matches. The DNA Database reports a possible suspect to the Police for further investigation. If as a result, the DNA information is likely to be used as evidence, a further sample is taken from the suspect for analysis and a report on a match by a forensic science reporting officer.

The Home Secretary has received no reports concerning the DNA database and alleged miscarriages of justice. The DNA database would not normally be used for this purpose. If the Criminal Cases Review Commission (CCRC) asked the Forensic Science Service to review DNA evidence in a specific case, the results would be recorded on the individual CCRC case file.

There are no plans to alter the existing role of the National DNA database. Last year, my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister announced an additional investment of £34 million over the next two years to launch a programme to expand the National DNA Database so that it holds profiles of all active criminals, to be matched against samples taken from crime scenes. This will increase the Database's effectiveness as an intelligence tool.

Cleveland Police

Dr. Kumar: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) number (b) name and (c) cost of each inquiry into Cleveland police corruption since 1992; and if he will make a statement on the outcome of these inquiries. [114100]

Mr. Charles Clarke: There have been two major inquiries since 1992 into alleged corruption with Cleveland police, known as Operations Lancet and Teak. The latest available costs of these inquiries are £2.2 million and £314,000 respectively. In Operation Lancet, the final decision as to whether any officer will face prosecution is now a matter for the Crown Prosecution Service. Papers from Operation Teak are currently under consideration by Senior Treasury Counsel.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Paice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many units of housing are currently occupied by asylum seekers; and what is the breakdown between (a) privately-rented homes, (b) charity and housing association properties, (c) local authority housing and (d) property which would not otherwise be available for housing. [113881]

Mrs. Roche: This information is not collected centrally.

Ethnic Minority Police Officers

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many ethnic minority police officers there were in each year since 1980 (a) nationally and (b) in each police force. [113931]

Mr. Charles Clarke: It is not possible to provide information on the number of ethnic minority officers before 1990. Figures for 1990 can be provided only on an aggregate basis, and on a force basis only at disproportionate cost.

The tables set out the number of ethnic officers in total, including officers who are seconded to the National Crime Squad (NCS), the National Criminal Intelligence Service (NCIS) and central services and show the number of ethnic minority officers by force for each year since March 1991.

Racially Aggravated Assault

Mr. Woodward: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prosecutions there have been for racially aggravated assault under the Crime and Disorder Act 1998. [113868]

Mr. Charles Clarke: Provisional information available centrally indicates that there were 247 prosecutions for assault (as defined under section 29 of the Crime and Disorder Act 1998) in magistrates courts from 30 October 1998 to 30 June 1999.

City Status Conferral

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when it was decided that towns competing for city status for the third millennium needed a population in excess of 200,000 to qualify. [113848]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: No such decision has been made. Although population size is taken into account by my right hon. Friend the Home Secretary in submitting a recommendation to Her Majesty the Queen, the grant of city status is not a right that can be claimed by a town fulfilling certain criteria, but an honour conferred by the Sovereign by Letters Patent.

Mr. Bob Russell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the name of the town to be awarded city status for the third millennium will be announced. [113847]

Mr. Mike O'Brien: Thirty-nine applications have been received for the Millennium grant of city status from towns in the United Kingdom; each application is being considered on its individual merits. No date has been set for the announcement of the new city.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from his Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113970]

Mr. Straw: The Home Office press office does not use couriers to distribute news releases and has no record or recollection of one being used during the period detailed. Press releases are distributed via the Electronic News Distribution Service, e-mail, post and are placed on the Home Office website.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which his Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113997]

Mr. Straw: Home Office press releases are distributed in a number of different ways including electronically, by fax, e-mail and by post. All are now posted on the Home Office website. National media receive all Home Office press releases while others, depending on a range of factors such as subject and content, are distributed to the regional, local or specialist media. Identifying the distribution list of every press release since 2 May 1997 would, however, incur disproportionate costs. If the hon. Member would like to write to me about a particular news release that he has in mind, I would be happy to provide any further information that is available.

HEALTH

Shipman Inquiry

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will establish the Shipman inquiry under Salmon rules to allow open hearings at which the parties can be represented and cross-examined. [109118]

Mr. Milburn [holding answer 8 February 2000]: I have now placed a letter to Lord Laming of Tewin in the Library, setting out the agreed format and powers for the inquiry into the issues arising out of the case of Harold Shipman.

Epilim

Mr. Love: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what assessment he has made of (a) the side-effects of the drug Epilim, (b) the circumstances in which it should not be prescribed to children, (c) the number of cases since 1995 in which children who have been given Epilim have developed (i) fits and (ii) other adverse reactions, (d) the number of cases since 1995 where Epilim has been given to pregnant women and (e) the number of cases since 1995 of pregnant women who have been treated with Epilim and who have then given birth to babies with birth defects; [107571]

(2) what is the stated recommended dose of the drug Epilim when administering it to (a) adults and (b) children. [107570]

Ms Stuart: As with all medicines, the safety of Epilim, the anticonvulsant sodium valproate, is continually monitored by the Medicines Control Agency (MCA) and the independent advisory body, the Committee on Safety of Medicines (CSM) through the Yellow Card Scheme for spontaneous reporting of suspected Adverse Drug Reactions (ADRs). A number of articles have been published in the bulletin 'Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance' to draw ADRs associated with Epilim to the attention of health professionals.

23 suspected ADRs associated with the drug Epilim, all involving children between the ages of 2–11, have been reported to the MCA/CSM from the beginning of 1995 to date. Two of these cases had fits. Reporting of a suspected adverse reaction is not necessarily evidence that the medicine caused the reaction.

In the same period in the United Kingdom, 22 cases of birth defects for women exposed to the drug Epilim during pregnancy were reported to the MCA/CSM. The product information for Epilim contains detailed advice about use in pregnancy and the prescribing physician should weigh up the risks and benefits in the individual woman's case. The number of cases since 1995 where Epilim has been given to pregnant women is not available.

Epilim is contraindicated in all patients including children where there is allergy to sodium valproate, active liver disease or family history of severe liver disease.

The daily dose of the drug Epilim as stated in the Marketing Authorisation for adults and children over 20 kilograms is gradually increased until control of fits is achieved, usually to within the range 20–30 milligrams/kilograms body weight per day. For children under 20kg, the daily dose of 20 mg/kg of body weight per day may be exceeded in severe cases when plasma levels can be closely monitored. Full guidance on prescribing and monitoring is in the summary of product characteristics published in the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry Compendium of Data Sheets and Summaries of Product Characteristics.

Power Lines

Mr. Hancock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations he has received this year and in the past three years on the health effects of power lines; and if he will make a statement. [108589]

Yvette Cooper: A number of letters have been received from hon. Members, research organisations and pressure groups and individual members of the public, concerning the possibility of health effects associated with proximity to power lines. Results of the United Kingdom Childhood Cancer Study published in December 1999 found no evidence to link childhood cancer with exposure to magnetic fields from electricity supply. The Department has funded work on the impact of electric fields which will report later this year. The National Radiological Protection Board's Advisory Group on Non-ionising Radiation keep the relevant research under review and will be publishing a comprehensive overview later this year.

MRI Scanner (Walsall)

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) on how many occasions his Department has discussed a MRI scanner in Walsall with the New Opportunities Fund; [112760]

(2) when his Department gave advice to the New Opportunities Fund over the provision of a MRI scanner in Walsall. [112759]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 2 March 2000]: During the months leading up to the announcement of funding from the New Opportunities Fund for cancer equipment in September 1999, there were numerous discussions between officials at the Department and the New Opportunities Fund about where equipment for cancer should be allocated. This built on discussions between officials within the Department and the National Health Service regional offices. This regular and ongoing dialogue will have included discussions about the possibility of funding an MRI scanner in Walsall.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who makes the final decision on whether finances would be available for a MRI scanner in Walsall. [112758]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 2 March 2000]: The final decisions on whether finances would be available for a MRI scanner in Walsall were made by the Board of the New Opportunities Fund, based on the advice they received from the Department. This will have followed discussions between officials within the Department and the West Midlands Regional Office.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the petition handed in to the New Opportunities Fund on 16 February for an MRI scanner in Walsall has been received by his Department. [112821]

Yvette Cooper [holding answer 3 March 2000]: The petition handed into the New Opportunities Fund on 16 February was, on that same day, passed by the Chief Executive of the New Opportunities Fund, Stephen Dunmore, to the Department.

Clinical Negligence

Mr. Horam: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much each NHS trust paid to the NHS Litigation Authority's clinical negligence scheme in (a) 1998–99 and (b) 1999–2000; what was each trust's total budget; what proportion the clinical negligence scheme payment was of each trust's total budget in each of those years; and what are the estimated figures for 2000–01. [113151]

Ms Stuart: A table containing available information has been placed in the Library.

Ambulance Travel Times

Mr. Norman: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what standard his Department sets as the maximum acceptable travel time for an ambulance to reach the nearest accident and emergency department. [113264]

Ms Stuart: There are no standards set for travel time from incident to accident and emergency department. All ambulance services will be required to meet the response time targets set out in Health Service Circular 1999/091 "Modernisation of Ambulance Services" in 2001.

Contraceptive Drugs

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proportion of the prescriptions for emergency contraceptive drugs made during 1997–98 he estimates to have prevented unwanted pregnancies. [113164]

Yvette Cooper: In 1997, 760,000 prescriptions were issued by general practitioners or family planning clinics for emergency contraception pills. Guidance issued in October 1999 by the Faculty of Family Planning states that the overall risk of pregnancy, after a single act of unprotected sex on any day in the menstrual cycle is 2–4 per cent. but can be as high as 20–30 per cent. in the days before and just after ovulation. These figures are for all ages and include older women whose fertility is declining. An accurate estimate of the number of pregnancies expected without treatment is not possible without the menstrual and coital histories of the women concerned.

It is generally understood that use of Schering PC4 (the only hormonal product licensed for emergency contraception use in 1997) prevents 75 per cent. of potential pregnancies that would otherwise occur.

NHS Trusts

Dr. Stoate: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what financial arrangements are being made in respect of the NHS trusts dissolved on 1 April 1999, 1 May 1999 and 1 October 1999 in connection with new NHS trusts established on those dates. [114548]

Mr. Milburn: Pursuant to the dissolution of 48 National Health Service trusts on 1 April 1999, 1 May 1999 and 1 October 1999, and their reconfiguration through the establishment of 23 new trusts on those dates, I propose to create originating capital for the new trusts equal to the net assets transferred to them and therefore to remit the outstanding debt of the dissolved trusts.

These operations will involve no overall loss to the Exchequer. Her Majesty's Treasury has today presented a minute to the House of Commons giving particulars and circumstances of the proposed remission which it has approved in principle.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from his Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113980]

Ms Stuart: As is common practice among many Government Departments, the Central Office of Information News Distribution Service issues press releases on behalf of the Department. Couriers are unlikely to be used purely to distribute press releases. It is however impossible to separate the times when couriers were used as the only practical means of sending out sensitive material which may have had news releases attached.

There were 1,656 press releases issued and the cost of this distribution was £75,365, for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which his Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113996]

Ms Stuart: The cost of compiling the lists of national, regional, local newspapers and media bodies is disproportionate. The Department ensures press releases are made available to the press via the news distribution service managed by Central Office of Information; and the Internet.

Targeted distribution will rely on the subject and content of the specific press releases.

Mr. Bruce (Cancelled Operation)

Mr. Webb: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will investigate the circumstances which led to the second cancellation of a rotator cuff repair operation for a constituent, Mr. Bruce, at the Avon Orthopaedic Centre on 7 March. [114143]

Ms Stuart: Continuing high numbers of medical admissions have necessitated the postponement of a number of orthopaedic operations. Decisions about the postponement of operations are taken by clinicians on the basis of clinical priority.

The trust is taking action to maintain its elective capacity by the use of weekend operating lists, the use of local independent hospitals to enable routine surgical operations to be performed by national Health Service surgeons operating in NHS time, and buying places in private nursing homes to facilitate the discharge of medical patients.

NHS Staff

Mr. Paul Marsden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if he will list, for each year since 1992 to date, the number of (a) nurses, (b) doctors and (c) consultants employed by the Royal Shrewsbury Hospital; and if he will make a statement. [114124]

Mr. Denham: The table illustrates that the number of nursing, midwifery and health visiting staff employed by the Royal Shrewsbury Hospitals National Health Service Trust declined between the years 1994 and 1997. However, numbers remain constant for 1998, and the numbers of hospital medical doctors employed within the trust steadily increased since 1994, demonstrating our commitment to increase the number of doctors and nurses working within the NHS. It should be noted that inflated figures for nursing staff in 1994 are not comparable with later years, due to a new classification system introduced in 1995 (see notes).

NHS Hospital and Community Health Services (HCHS): Nursing, Midwifery and hospital visiting staff, employed by Royal Shrewsbury Hospital NHS Trust, as at 30 September of each year

	Nursing, Midwifery and health visiting staff		Hospital medical staff and consultants
	Whole-time equivalents	Numbers (headcount)	Numbers (headcount)	Of which medical consultants
1994	850	1,130	160	70
1995	750	950	170	70
1996	730	940	190	70
1997	710	900	190	70
1998	720	900	200	80

Notes:
1. The Royal Shrewsbury Hospitals NHS Trust came into being on 1 April 1994. Data from earlier years cannot be disaggregated from health authority returns.
2. Figures are rounded to the nearest ten.
3. 1994 figures include agency staff and exclude learners, 1995 to 1998 figures exclude agency staff and learners.
4. A new classification of the non-medical workforce was introduced in 1995, therefore information based on this classification is not comparable with earlier years.
5. Before 1996, some hospital medical staff were employed directly by the Regional Health Authority and so may not be included in these figures.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

BSE Inquiry (Costs)

Dr. Cable: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the maximum amount spent to date on legal fees at the BSE Inquiry in support of an individual serving or former civil servant in (a) Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food and (b) the Department of Health; and how much has been spent to date in supporting Sir Richard Southwood and his working party. [112440]

Ms Quin: All witnesses have had legal support available to them, under the procedures established by the BSE Inquiry, to assist in presenting their involvement in the BSE story to the Inquiry. To protect the privacy of individuals we consider it inappropriate to provide figures for the legal support of any individual or advisory group.

Greyhounds

Mr. Baker: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many licences have been issued for the export of racing greyhounds to Vietnam in the last three years; and if he will make a statement. [112390]

Ms Quin [holding answer 1 March 2000]: Licences are not issued for the export of greyhounds to Vietnam or any other destination.

This Department is responsible for the issue of export health certificates to accompany dogs to Vietnam and other destinations. These are provided at the request of the Vietnamese authorities. The health certificate for the export of dogs to Vietnam provides guarantees to the Vietnamese authorities and the importer that the animals are free from signs of disease and are vaccinated against rabies. Export health certificates are signed by government appointed veterinarians. The certificates do not contain information on the breed of dogs being exported.

In the last three years two such animal health certificates for Vietnam have been issued—one for 1997 and one for 1999.

The above figures are not sub-categorised by breed. It is not therefore possible for me to state whether either of these animals were greyhounds or the purpose for which they were intended, for example racing.

This Department provides advice on request to all exporters that they must ensure that exported animals comply with the requirements of the relevant importing country. Where there is a requirement for an export health certificate to accompany a consignment of animals this advice is given.

Genetically Modified Organisms

Joan Ruddock: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what are (a) the growing season for genetically modified herbicide tolerant winter oil seed rape in UK field trials and (b) the prohibited period for the use of the herbicide glufosinate ammonia in the UK; and on what research evidence the prohibited period for glufosinate ammonia is based. [111353]

Ms Quin [holding answer 28 February 2000]: Genetically modified herbicide tolerant winter oil seed rape is sown at the end of August and the beginning of September; the crop is harvested in the following July or early August.

Approvals for the commercial use of glufosinate ammonium on oil seed rape all prohibit its use for weed control from 30 September to 1 March. This is because data submitted do not support its use on oil seed rape during that period.

However, experimental approvals have not imposed this prohibition.

Fertiliser Regulations

Ms Walley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his latest assessment of the adequacy of the Fertiliser Regulations, following the Spongiform Encephalopathy Advisory Committee's recommendation on the use of liquid condensate as a fertiliser on grazing land. [113041]

Ms Quin: The Fertiliser Regulations were introduced originally to complement the ban on Mammalian Meat and Bone Meal in animal feed. Their purpose is to avoid ruminant animals gaining access to a source of potentially recycled disease. We are actively considering the adequacy of these and other controls in relation to the Committee's recommendations concerning liquid condensate.

Chernobyl (Farming Land)

Mr. Cox: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what acreage of farming land has restricted use as a result of the Chernobyl nuclear explosion. [113604]

Ms Quin [holding answer 8 March 2000]: The total area of farming land still subject to restrictions in England as a result of the Chernobyl accident is approximately 2,650 hectares (6,543 acres).

Biomass (Carbon Dioxide)

Mr. Jack: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate by how much plantings of biomass would have to be increased on an annual basis (a) to save the equivalent of the horticulture industry's current carbon dioxide output and (b) to save the equivalent of two million tonnes of carbon dioxide annually, using the same basis for his calculation as that used in page 7/5 of the England Rural Development Plan 2000–06. [113363]

Ms Quin [holding answer 8 March 2000]: I will write to the right hon. Member with the information he has requested as soon as possible and arrange to place a copy of the letter in the Libraries of the House.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Notre Europe

Mr. Bercow: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what EU support has been provided, since its inception, to the Notre Europe organisation; and what contacts his Department has had with that organisation. [112335]

Mr. Vaz: The information is readily available from the European Commission.

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussion his Department is having with the Government of Norway on the initiative the Norwegian Government are taking to help resolve the conflict in Sri Lanka; and if he will make a statement. [113431]

Mr. Vaz: The Minister of State, my hon. Friend the Member for Neath (Mr. Hain), discussed the Norwegians' role in Sri Lanka with State Secretary Wegger Christian Strommen during the latter's visit to the United Kingdom this week. The Foreign Secretary will also have an opportunity to raise the matter when he sees Norwegian Foreign Minister Knut Vollebaek during his visit to Oslo on 15 March. Our Embassy in Oslo discusses the initiative regularly with Norwegian Foreign Ministry officials.

Turkey

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he had with the Mayor of Hasankeyf about his proposed meeting in London; and what reasons underlay the decision to cancel that visit. [113561]

Mr. Vaz: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary had no discussion with the Mayor of Hasenkeyf about his proposed visit to London. The Mayor had scheduled meetings at the Department of Trade and Industry and with the Export Credits Guarantee Department (to be attended by FCO officials).

We were informed that the visit had been cancelled because the Mayor's political party had advised him to return to Turkey.

UK Affiliations

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the regional arrangements and agencies, as recognised under Chapter VIII of the Charter of the United Nations, of which the United Kingdom is a member. [113747]

Mr. Hain: There is no recognised list of regional arrangements and agencies of the kind referred to in Chapter VIII of the UN Charter.

Press Releases

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the (a) national, (b) regional and (c) local newspapers and media bodies to which his Department sent news releases during the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000. [113987]

Mr. Robin Cook: Most news releases (including the FCO Daily Bulletin) are distributed electronically via the COI news Distribution Service. In addition a number of newspapers and media organisations receive this material by fax. Both distribution lists are attached. Press releases also appear on the FCO website.

In addition, individual releases are faxed, on request and/or out of hours to other members of the press on an ad hoc basis. Records are not kept of these additional, ad hoc transmissions.

Note:

Many organisations now access the Daily Bulletin and press releases via the FCO website.

Mr. Brady: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for the period 2 May 1997 to 29 February 2000 what was (a) the number of occasions on which couriers were used to distribute news releases from his Department and (b) the total cost of using couriers to distribute news releases. [113975]

Mr. Robin Cook: Over this period, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office has not distributed its news releases to media organisations by courier.

The FCO Daily Bulletin is distributed to Commonwealth High Commissions in London by courier, as part of regular deliveries of other FCO correspondence. Until September 1999 this service was provided in house. Since September 1999 these services have been contracted out.

The cost of delivering news releases in this courier service, as distinct from the costs of delivering other mail distributed with them, is not calculated. To provide a separate breakdown of the cost of delivering news releases, as a proportion of the total volume of correspondence distributed to High Commissions, would incur disproportionate costs.

Restraints (Exports)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his letter to the Chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee of 2 February concerning his investigation into allegations of a breach of the ban on the export of leg irons, if he will list those US authorities and their departments from whom he enlisted assistance; what form of record was written and to whom in the course of this assistance; and if he will place copies of this material in the Library. [112932]

Mr. Hain: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 15 February 2000, Official Report, column 490W. We were grateful for the assistance of the US authorities, via the US Embassy in London, in helping us carry out investigations into the allegations in The Independent newspaper on 16 and 17 November. The US Embassy did not provide us with a written report.

We are not aware of any illegal conduct on the part of UK individuals or companies. Should any evidence be produced, we would of course pass it on to the appropriate investigative authorities.

Select Committees

Mr. Bruce George: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which select committees, other than the Foreign Affairs Committee, Ministers in his Department have (a) submitted memorandums to and (b) appeared before in the present Parliament. [112403]

Mr. Robin Cook: Our records show that in the present Parliament Ministers have submitted memorandums to the following Select Committees of the House of Commons:

Culture, Media and Sport

Defence

Environmental Audit

European Legislation/EU Scrutiny

Health

International Development

Procedure

Public Accounts

Public Administration

Scottish Affairs

Standards and Privileges, and

Trade and Industry.

Ministers have appeared before the Defence

International Development

Trade and Industry

Environment, Transport and Regional Affairs, and European Legislation/European Scrutiny Committees.

South Africa

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations were made to the South African Government by Her Majesty's Government about (a) the visit to South Africa en route to Mozambique by members of Her Majesty's forces, (b) the arrangements for Her Majesty's forces personnel to leave the aircraft while at a South African airbase and (c) facilities to be provided for members of Her Majesty's forces to use while on this stopover in South Africa; what responses were received to such representations; and what reply was given to the South African response. [113923]

Mr. Hain: Our High Commissions in Pretoria and Maputo held extensive discussions with the South African and Mozambican authorities. I also spoke to President Mbeki's Legal Adviser. As a result, the South African Government agreed, with the approval of the Mozambican Government, that the British military team could use Hoedspruit as a rear base for its operation. We are grateful to the South African Government for the help they are giving to our team and I pay tribute to the fast and effective way in which they have responded to the disaster in Mozambique. Our teams are working closely together in the international relief effort.

Kosovo

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of progress made in implementing (a) Stage I and (b) Stage II of UNMIK's general strategy for Kosovo. [113876]

Mr. Vaz: UNSCR 1244, which established the international presences in Kosovo, gave the UN Interim Administration Mission (UNMIK) responsibility for: (i) performing basic civilian administrative functions; (ii) developing provisional institutions for democratic self-government; and (iii) transferring responsibilities to these provisional institutions.

UNMIK has established a civil administration in Kosovo. It secured the agreement of the Kosovo Albanian leadership to participate in Joint Interim Administrative Structures (JIAS), integrating UNMIK administration with local participation. UNMIK hopes that the Kosovo Serbs will soon agree to join the JIAS. UNMIK plans to hold municipal elections in Kosovo later this year.

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs in respect of each of the last eight months how many civilian police officers were requested by the head of UNMIK in Kosovo. [113872]

Mr. Hain: The UN Secretary General, who is responsible for making recommendations to the Security Council, requested in July 1999 that member states provide 3,110 police officers for the United Nations International Police. This request remained unchanged until November 1999 when the requirement was increased to 4,718.

Serbia

Mr. Maude: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the political and security situation in southern Serbia. [113870]

Mr. Hain: The political and security situation within the Presevo Valley area of southern Serbia appears to be tense. Clashes have taken place between armed groups and Serbian security forces near the administrative border with Kosovo. KFOR have warned Kosovo Albanians not to export trouble and have tightened control of the boundary with Serbia. Compiling accurate information on the situation within Serbia has been obstructed by the FRY authorities, who refused to co-operate with a 3 March visit to the area by the EU Troika.

Iraq

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is his estimate of the amount of money the Iraqi authorities could have spent on the purchase of medicines since sanctions started. [114122]

Mr. Hain: Sanctions have never prohibited the import of medicines into Iraq. Under the UN's "oil for food" programme, which was first proposed in 1991 but rejected by the Iraqi government for five years, over $10 billion worth of revenue has been available for the purchase of humanitarian supplies. It is for the Government of Iraq to decide how it allocates that money between the various humanitarian sectors. It has chosen, for example, to allocate $10 million to purchase bank note counting machines under the current phase of the programme. The UN Secretary-General has refused to approve this allocation.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans the Government have to ensure that there is adequate medicine to allow Iraqi civilians to receive the treatment needed. [114119]

Mr. Hain: The Government have always worked closely with the UN to ensure that the humanitarian programme is as effective as possible in order to ease the suffering of the Iraqi people. SCR 1284, a UK initiative, contains a raft of measures to make the programme bigger and better, including the removal of the ceiling on the amount of oil Iraq can sell to purchase humanitarian goods. But the government of Iraq is ultimately responsible for deciding how that review is to be allocated. We urge the government of Iraq to take full advantage of the opportunities SCR 1284 offers, and to put the people's needs for food and medicines first when allocating revenue, rather than allocating millions of dollars for bank note counting machines, for example.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports his Department has received of medicine brought into Iraq since sanctions started which has not been used for ordinary Iraqi civilians. [114123]

Mr. Hain: We have received reports of widespread official and black-market abuse of medical goods supplied to Iraq under the "oil for food" programme. We are aware, for example that such medicines are being sold by pharmacies in countries neighbouring Iraq. We have passed this information to the UN for further investigation.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's estimate of the number of children in Iraq who are likely to lack adequate medical treatment as a result of UN sanctions. [114121]

Mr. Hain: Sanctions have never prohibited the import of medicines into Iraq. While the international community has sought to maximise the relief available to the Iraqi people, the Government of Iraq has refused to put their welfare first. For example, the latest UN report notes that one quarter of all medical goods delivered to Iraq since the "oil for food" programme began have not been distributed. Under "oil for food" the Government of Iraq decides how much oil revenue will be allocated to purchase medical goods. The UN Secretary General has repeatedly observed that Iraq needs to give greater attention to the provision of basic pharmaceuticals, primary and preventive health-care services and material support for more effective distribution.

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 345

SESSION 1999–2000

28th February—10th March 2000

Printed indexes to Hansard

The volume index is one of three printed indexes to Commons Hansard produced from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Indexing Service (POLIS). It contains references to material in the bound volumes of Hansard. The other indexes produced are:

- The fortnightly index to Hansard. This covers the same date range as the volume index but references are to the column numbering in the daily parts and weekly edition of Hansard.
- The sessional index to Hansard. This contains references to material in the bound volumes for a whole session.

Indexes on the Parliamentary website

Fortnightly, volume and sessional indexes covering material from the beginning of the 1999/2000 session will also appear on the Parliamentary website at http://www.parliament.uk with links to the full text of Hansard.

SCOPE

The indexes include entries covering:

- The content of all material recorded in Hansard, including debates, procedural motions and questions.
- The names of all Members contributing to the Parliamentary business recorded in Hansard.
- The names of some types of Parliamentary business whenever they occur in Hansard. These are 'Ministerial statements', 'Business statements', 'Opposition days' and 'Estimates days'.

ARRANGEMENT

- All headings are in one word-by-word alphabetical sequence, with Members' contribution entries distinguished from other entries by italics.
- Where a Member contributes to Parliamentary business and is the subject of Parliamentary business there are separate contribution and subject entries, the subject entry coming first.
- Entries beginning 'Mac' and 'Mc' are sorted in one sequence as 'Mac'.
- 'St', when abbreviated for Saint, is filed as 'Saint'.
- Numbers are filed as if spelt out, e.g. '10 Downing Street' as if 'Ten Downing Street'.

HEADINGS

Choice of headings

- Specificity—Entries summarise the overall content of a debate or question as specifically as the various POLIS thesauruses allow. For example, Education, Higher education, Universities or the name of a particular university is used depending on the breadth of the item.
- Name headings—Specific entries are included for the names of people, places, institutions, organisations, committees, programmes, initiatives, publications and legislation when these constitute the overall subject of an item.
- Organisations and subjects—Organisation entries are preferred for material about the general performance, administration and staffing of an organisation (for example, United Kingdom Passports Agency, Standards). Subject entries are preferred for what organisations do as part of their duties (for example, Passports, Fees and charges).

Geographical coverage

- Subject headings—Subject headings are assumed to refer to the whole of England, Great Britain or the United Kingdom unless otherwise stated.
- Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales—Material relating to the whole of Scotland, Northern Ireland and Wales is indexed under these headings.
- Places within the UK—Material about specific towns, areas and institutions is entered under the name of the specific town, area or institution.
- Foreign countries—Most material relating to foreign countries is collected under the name of that country. Some additional material may be found under the names of—groups of countries, areas within countries, geographical features, place names associated with particular issues, politicians and heads of state, international bodies, and institutions and companies operating in those countries.
- EC/EU material—General material about the European Communities and European institutions as bodies is entered under 'European Communities' and 'EC institutions'. Organisational material about specific communities and institutions is entered under the name of the body, for example 'European Coal and Steel Community' or 'European Parliament'. Material about what the Communities and institutions are doing or propose to do is entered under various subject headings beginning 'EC' such as 'EC environmental policy'.

Parliamentary material and business

- Material about Parliament—This is indexed under 'Parliament', the names of the two Houses, the 'Palace of Westminster' and parts of the Parliamentary estate (such as 'Portcullis House').
- Committees—Material about committees is indexed under 'Committees', types of committee (such as 'Select committees') and the names of individual committees (such as 'Home Affairs Select Committee').
- Parliamentary proceedings/procedures—Material discussing these is indexed under the specific type of proceeding (such as 'Parliamentary questions' or 'Oral questions'), procedure (such as 'Calling of Members') or issue (such as 'Unparliamentary expressions').
- Legislation—Entries for Parliamentary proceedings on bills and statutory instruments are entered under their titles. Where the lead word of the bill or statutory instrument does not provide a full or clear indication of the subject there are additional subject entries when the bill or instrument is debated. For example, debates on the 'Child Support Pensions and Social Security Bill' have entries under 'Pensions' and 'Social security benefits' as well as under the title of the Bill.
- Members' names—These are given in the form by which the Member prefers to be known.
- Speaker and Chair—Contributions by the Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker and deputies'. Contributions from the chair during Committees of the Whole House are brought together under 'Chairman of Committee of the Whole House'. Significant rulings and statements (as opposed to routine comments) are indicated by the sub-heading 'Rulings and statements' in both cases.

Guidance on headings

- Cross references—'See' references indicate all the material has been entered under another heading. 'See also' references indicate that additional information may be found under another heading.
- Concept thesaurus—A copy of the subject thesaurus to POLIS, listing the concept entries used in the index, is available on the Parliamentary website. A hard copy is available from the Head of the POLIS Unit, House of Commons Library, 1 Derby Gate, London, SW1A 2DG (020 7219 6456).

REFERENCES

- References in the indexes are to columns rather than pages.
- References to debates, but not questions, are accompanied by the date of the item.
- There are separate sequences in Hansard for the material taken on the floor of the House, Westminster Hall sittings and written questions:
  - References consisting of a number by itself indicate material taken on the floor of the House.
  - References ending in 'wh' indicate Westminster Hall sittings.
  - References ending in 'w' indicate written questions.
- References under all headings except the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in one numerical sequence irrespective of whether the material is taken on the floor of the House, is discussed at a Westminster Hall sitting or is a written question.
- References under the names of Members contributing to Parliamentary business and the titles of legislation are listed in numerical sequence under the following headings:
  - Debates etc. (which includes interventions and points of order as well as significant contributions to debates);
  - Sittings in Westminster Hall (covering all debates held as part of the Westminster Hall sittings); and
  - Questions (which includes written, oral and private notice questions).
